The Result in Favor of the French.

Departure of Fenians from Dublin to Join the French Armies.

Tours Now the Actual Seat of the Government.

NEW PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Consultation Between Jules Favre and Bismarck—Lord Lyons Conducts the Business—An Armistice Arranged.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The Observer prints in official type the following statement: "The prospects of peace are now better than at any time since the beginning of the war. Lord LYONS, the British Minister at Paris, conducts negotiations between JULES FAVRE and Count VON BISMARCK. It is said a brief armistice has already been arranged."

THE FEELING IN LONDON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The prospects of peace look more favorable today. The statement that BISMARCK has consented to receive JULES FAVRE informally, is regarded here as an indication of a disposition of the King, on arriving before the walls of Paris, to relax the vigor of his demands. Lord LYONS deserves all praise for his individual efforts to bring about the interview.

ANOTHER APPEAL FOR PEACE.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The Economist of this city, today, has a strong article in favor of peace. "The very object of the war," the article says, "was to sustain the principle of German unity against the objections of France. That object is now attained, and mankind should interpose to save Paris, and then agree that no great city shall hereafter be fortified."

LONDON NOTES.

Imperfect Armament of the Paris Fortifications—The Woods at Clamart—German Volunteers for the French.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The statement I wrote you about the imperfect armament of the fortifications of Paris is confirmed by the evacuation of Vincennes and the removal of the old-style guns to the city.

THE WOODS IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD.

But a small portion of the woods in the neighborhood of Paris have been destroyed. Those at Clamart already afford shelter to the Prussians.

FENIAN VOLUNTEERS FOR THE FRENCH.

A gentleman who arrived from Dublin this morning informs me that considerable numbers of Fenians are leaving there for France, to serve in the armies against the Prussians.

ATTACKS ON CATHOLICS.

I saw a letter from Nismes yesterday, stating that, when the Republic was announced in the Cevennes, descendents of the old Huguenots tried to hunt down and shoot the Bishop of Nismes. An American Catholic family in the neighborhood was obliged to take to the woods to save themselves.

PLOT AMONG THE FRENCH AT SEDAN.

There is a report here to-night of the discovery of a plot among the French population at Sedan, to seize the French guns and mitrailleuses captured on the 1st of September. The town was declared in a state of siege. Two thousand stand of arms were discovered.

ESCAPE OF FRENCH PRISONERS.

A report is received from Rome of the escape of 10,000 French prisoners.

PARIS NOTES.

An Old Military Trick—The Flag to Protect American Citizens—Price of Provisions—A Bonapartist Plot—The Erection of the Guillotine Urged—The Loan Explosion.

[The following appeared in the TIMES of yesterday:]

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Our correspondent at Paris, writing under date of the 15th, says: "It is evident that the King of Prussia hopes for assistance within the walls of Paris—thus carrying out an old military trick. Within the last few days a great many Uhlans have been captured, all of whom pretend to have lost their horses. Two were taken on Tuesday a great distance from their corps. It looks suspicious that all these prisoners speak the French language perfectly. I fear we shall have another wooden horse affair. It is most imprudent to keep Prussian prisoners in the city when the fight begins."

AMERICANS IN PARIS.

The United States Minister has advised all Americans remaining in Paris during the siege to stay in their apartments, but be sure to keep the American flag flying from their roof or windows. The Americans accordingly are taking the siege coolly, and putting a chip on their shoulders, waiting for some one to knock it off if he dares.

PRICE OF PROVISIONS.

The Journal Officiel publishes a decree this morning fixing the price of butchers' meat; that of the best cuts at twenty-one sous per pound. The Prefect of the Police has issued an order that all the wines and provisions found in the Imperial Palaces shall be distributed to the ambulances.

A BONAPARTIST PLOT.

Many of the old Police force of Paris have been arrested on the charge of being concerned in a Bonapartist plot. The nephew of Ex-Prefect of the Seine, PIETRI, who was recently arrested, is believed to be at the head of the conspiracy.

THE RED REPUBLICANS.

A correspondent of the Globe, writing from Paris, says the Red Republicans are now really more dangerous to the safety of the city than the Prussians themselves. Some of them are already urging the erection of the guillotine.

THE LAON EXPLOSION.

LONDON, Sept. 17—P. M.—The commandant of the Fortress of Laon has been fully exonerated of the charge of blowing up the citadel after its surrender to the Prussians. It has been ascertained that it was done by a guard of the magazine—an Alma veteran—in a state of patriotic exhilation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS.

Prussians on Heights in the Environs of Paris—A Reconnoissance from Paris—Skirmish Near Creteil—A Fight in the Woods—The French Victorious.

LONDON, Sept. 18—10 A. M.—The Prussians advancing on Paris have appeared on the heights of Villeneuve and Brunoy. [In the environs of Paris.]

PRUSSIAN CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY.

LONDON, Sept. 18—Noon.—Prince ALBRECHT, with cavalry and artillery, passed through Provins, on Thursday and Friday, and proceeded to Nangis. [Provins is a small town fifty-six miles south-south-east of Paris, and Nangis is thirteen miles west of Provins. It has extensive markets, and supplied Paris with provisions and vegetables.]

A SKIRMISH.

LONDON, Sept. 18—Evening.—On Saturday Gen. VINOY made a reconnoissance from Paris, and discovered a force of 30,000 Prussians posted at Creteil. A skirmish took place, in which the French lost fifteen killed and thirty wounded. A cannonade followed, lasting two hours. Cannonading has been heard in the directions of forts Ivry and Charenton. [The first on the south and the other on the south-east of Paris, forming part of the external line of defense.] It is reported that Gen. VON PALKENSTEIN's command has been added to the Prussian forces approaching Paris.

PARIS, Sept. 18.—There was hard fighting yesterday and today around Paris. A great number of volunteers left here this morning going northward.

A FIGHT IN THE WOODS.

TOURS, Sept. 18.—It is reported that a French corps of 80,000 men, under Gen. DUCROT occupy the woods of Clamart and Meudon [on the south-west of Paris.] There was a fight yesterday between the Prussians and three regiments of the line, assisted by some battalions of the Mobile Guards and a battery of artillery. The result was favorable to the French, the enemy falling back.

THE SEINE CROSSED.

[The following dispatches appeared in the TIMES of yesterday:]

TOURS, Sept. 17.—It is announced at the office of the French Secretary of the Interior that the Prussians have crossed the Seine with fifty cannon, and that the Prussian cavalry now isolates Soissons from Paris and Tours.

A dispatch from the Sub-Prefect at Mulhouse, announces that the enemy now occupies that town and Cernay, and seem to be seeking a new route to Paris. It is reported that the advance guard of the Prussians has been defeated between Mulhouse and Colmar.

VINCENNES.

TOURS, France, Sept. 17.—The fort at Vincennes was blown up and destroyed yesterday by the French, the position being untenable.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The Prussians are still numerous near Villeneuve, Dammartin and La Plessis. A force of 3,000 has occupied Villers, Cotterets, and there are 10,000 at Nanteuil. It is still believed the Prussian line of attack will be from the east by ways of Vincennes.

THE SIEGE TRAIN STILL DISABLED.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—It is said the Prussian siege train is still fast aground in the Canal de la Marne au Rhin, occasioned by the sudden withdrawal of the water in the Western Division by the French engineers.

RAILROADS CUT AND SEIZED.

LONDON, Sept. 17—4 P. M.—The Northern Railway, leading from Orleans to Paris, has been cut between Ablon and Juvisy, about eight miles south of Paris. At the latter place the Germans had planted a battery. Heavy firing was heard in that direction, and it is thought a battle was in progress. No details have been received. Sharp fighting has occurred at Rip, another small town on the Orleans Railway, where the line had been cut. The railroad to Laon is now entirely in the hands of the Prussians.

TOURS, France, Sept. 17.—The following news is promulgated through the office of the French Secretary of the Interior: All the service of the Northern Railway has been suspended. The Prussians have fired into passing trains at Ablon, and burned the depot there.

AT TOURS.

Arrival of the Corps Diplomatic—The City Now the Actual Seat of Government—Resident Consuls Mediating.

TOURS, Sept. 18—Evening.—The Corps Diplomatique arrived here today. The foreign Ministers left Paris, yesterday, in haste, having been informed that a serious attack was to be made.

HENRI ROCHEFORT is one of the strongest supporters of the Government. He uses his immense influence over the people to soothe and quiet the impatient, and counsels moderation. M. THIERS is expected here. (Tours,) on his way to Rome through Switzerland.

The precious articles in the Museum of Natural History here and the books of the Library of the Prefecture have been packed up to be sent away in case the city is menaced by the enemy.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Advices from Tours, now the actual seat of the French Government, complain of the frequent interruptions of mail and telegraphic intercourse with Paris and England. The Government therefore receives assurances from every quarter that the people are arming and hastening to places of rendezvous.

TOURS, Sept. 17.—The Liberté, Constitutionnel, Gazette de France, and some other journals which have heretofore been printed in

DEFENSE OF PARIS.

Clearing the Zone of Fire—The Cattle Supply in the Bois de Boulogne—The Volunteers in the Garde Nationale—Determination of the Prussians—The Mania for Speculation.

From Our Military Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Sept. 2, 1870.

Work upon the fortifications goes on with great rapidity, and although there is now little remaining to do upon the forts themselves, there is an immense amount of labor required to clear away the buildings from the zone of fire. The rapidity with which houses are taken down, and all traces of them swept away, is certainly marvelous. The proprietors of the buildings within the zone have shown a patriotic spirit, and not a single objection has been made to the expediency of this wholesale destruction. It must not be understood that all buildings beyond the fortifications are torn down. Only those within come within a certain zone are sacrificed; but beyond that zone the proprietors themselves are at work. Houses which, a few days ago, responded with song and happy laughter, are now deserted and in ruins. Everything which could be transported has been carried away—stair-cases and windows, balconies and stuccoed ornaments, all, in fact, but the bare walls themselves, has been taken to the city proper. To occupy these buildings under fire from the forts would be dangerous, indeed, to the enemy, for in their present condition a single shell could brink the walls down upon the heads of the Prussians who sought shelter in them from the deadly fire of the forts. Thousands of men are still engaged in clearing away the zone of fire. Last evening I passed along the quays where a body of workmen, in blouses and with spades upon their shoulders, were marching to their quarters. They were hardy peasants, accustomed to toil, and very glad to assist in the defense of the country by the use of the spade; and one could but remark the entire absence of all young men. Near the Rue Dauphine their procession was stopped by a long train of wagons bringing in flour, and at the same time a score of men were trying to urge a flock of sheep through the crowded street. In the train also one saw, here and there, the little peasant's carts heating in the household goods of some poor family driven away from its cherished home. The train of flour was advancing but slowly, for it ran to the depot of the Seventh Arrondissement, and had formed in line for a distance of near a mile. Each one of these wagons carries about thirty sacks, say twenty barrels, of flour. Cattle, sheep and hogs pour in so rapidly that the authorities begin to be a little embarrassed by numbers. The Bois de Boulogne is full of beeves, and the number was so great a few days ago that it gave rise to the report of many deaths for want of food. This is not true. Indeed, I imagine that it was a story started by a company here who have some kind of an "ax to grind"—an infallible method, I believe, of preserving meats always fresh, and always a little better than when just killed. If we could only get at the bottom of most rumors, it would generally be found that they arise in the brains of enthusiasts who have some "infallible method" either of preserving meats or of destroying the Prussians. But the disappearance of numbers of cattle tended to give currency to this report. All are being removed as fast as possible, and certain fields have been cleared of them in order to give room for military works, yet there are thousands remaining, and it is by no means an uninteresting spectacle to see these herds guarded by shepherds either in uniform or in blouses.

SPIRITED SCENES.

Any one passing along the boulevards this morning would have witnessed scenes which go far to show the spirit of the French nation at this moment. At 10 o'clock the newly organized corps of Gardes Nationale meet for drill, and I saw a number of splendid private carriages, some with coronets upon the panels, containing soldiers in the uniform so well known in Paris. These are the well-to-do and wealthy men of the city up to the age of forty-five who have answered the appeal to their patriotism. But they have rushed to arms to defend the capital. More than once I overheard slighting remarks about these men, while an incredulous smile hung about the lips of the old campaigners—of the cafés. But an hour later a regiment of these men came by, and no one could fail to pay a tribute to their appearance and their drill. After only about three weeks they have become most excellent soldiers, and they marched with an order and precision which would have done credit to a regiment of the line. I have no means of knowing the exact number of these men, but I judge that there are some forty thousand of them already drilled and ready for work with the Chassepot. And I believe that they will do good service. Intelligence goes a long ways in a soldier, although NAPOLEON's idea was that the Gardes Nationale should be selected from the most stupid men of the Provinces. It may not make them fire a gun any better, but it will make them "stick," for with intelligence there is a certain amount of pride. I have more than once been in places where, I do not hesitate to confess it, if I had had no more responsibility than a simple private, I should have looked around very carefully for a place of shelter. Many did so, but pride kept upon the field the intelligent and well-born young men of our troop. All of these men have pride—a strong pride in being French, and they know that they might as well lose their last upon Paris as to show cowardice before the invader. But, with their present spirit, even thousands will fight to the death. Mobs are always cowardly and unreliable, but the men who would be worthless in a street fight become splendid soldiers when thoroughly drilled, and animated with a spirit of patriotism. The Parisians boast no longer; they no longer roam the streets in bands, shouting "A Berlin," or chanting the Marseillaise; but in their present attitude I find ample assurance that they are determined to fight to the death for the defense of their city. M. THIERS has well expressed the feeling of a majority today. "We shall always have," he says, "two and a half Prussians against one, and we shall conquer them, although it may not be in some days. But let them come and besiege Paris, and I will certify that not one of them shall repass the frontier." Of course M. THIERS means to say that no organized bodies shall pass the frontier, although he speaks with some hyperbole, and I cannot but grow in his opinion day by day. Unless that great army retreats before it reaches the Seine, only straggling bands of it will ever cross the Rhine. You perceive that even I, not easily carried away by enthusiasm or excitement, have become thoroughly imbued with the prevailing sentiment of the day. One hundred thousand of the Garde Mobile have been ordered from the country and called into the defense of Paris. This force is about to arrive, and it is a question where they are to be quartered. Some say that the newly-erected, but not yet furnished, houses of the Faubourg St. Germain will be fixed; some recommend the houses of the rich who have left the city. At Troyes, strong measures were taken by the City Council, which decided that the closed houses of men who had fled should be opened to the soldiers, by order of the municipal authorities. This is severe, perhaps, but not entirely unjust, when we consider it on all sides. The better way, in my opinion, would be to billet these Mobiles upon the people of Paris, as the enemy's soldiers would be billeted upon them in case of a capture of the city. But there is a large number of empty houses, barely finished as yet, which may soon be made into effective barracks.

HELP FOR THE WOUNDED.

Offerings for the wounded are now the order of the day, and we have some amusing as well as humane and patriotic scenes. The Empress has given Compiegne for a hospital, and ISABELLA, the Catholic, has made an offering of the Hotel Beauharnais. Hundreds of private citizens have sent in their offers to take one, two, or more wounded in their houses, to nurse them and feed them free of cost. Nearly all of the public companies, too, have shown a patriotic spirit. The Swiss Omnibus Company, which has already given a large number of men and more than 1,500 horses to the Government for the war, now offers several of its city depots for hospitals. Besides this, the Company gives its farm of Claye, Department of Seine-et-Marne, for an ambulance. But there is some policy in the latter gift, as hundreds of gentlemen from the districts likely to be overrun by the enemy are very anxious to get the red cross of the hospital flag flying from their chateaux.

MANIA FOR SPECULATION.

Among the curses of war is the intense mania for speculation which seems to take possession of certain classes, and notably the dealers in provisions and the necessaries of life. In my last letter I mentioned the rise in potatoes, and today I have quite an incident to relate in this connection. A small measure of potatoes is ordinarily sold for from fifty to sixty centimes. A week ago they went up to one franc twenty centimes, and this morning the dealers demanded two and a half francs. A further rise was tried, but resolutely the women held a council of war, and determined to stop that little game. In a mass the insurgents charged the stands, overturned tables and measures, helping themselves to all they wished. It is not a very good way to diminish the price of this most excellent vegetable, largely used in Burgundy; one must admit that the provocation was great. In such a crisis, the Government may well be excused for fixing the price of articles of prime necessity.

THE EXPULSION OF GERMANS.

The order expelling all the Germans from Paris has brought out some curious facts and some unexpected results. A few days ago a few of these revelations that a sudden rush down was made, and some Germans were allowed to remain in Paris, under certain conditions. One of these conditions was to be guaranteed by well-known Frenchmen. There are many persons about the Court born across the Rhine, and it was found that men of German birth were high in authority here. Some of the best workmen and engineers on the railway lines were Germans, and more than one of the directors were of this nationality by birth. M. BEUSTENBACH, a Bavarian, is one of the superintendents of the Telegraph, while M. FARDAL, Director of the Post-office, was born at Cologne. So sweeping an order as that of Gen. TROCHU could hardly be carried out in a cosmopolitan city like Paris.

"FRICOTEURS."

In 1813 the energetic name of Fricoteurs was given to that band of rascals who live by preying upon the public, and this name is again coming into use. Several new tricks have lately been devised by this class of people, the last being to play the disconsolate father or widow of a soldier killed in battle, and beg money to bring home his remains. This game is said to have succeeded surprisingly until the exposé came.

FRANCE AND EUROPE.

Position of the Powers—Tone of the Press—Sentiment in France—Correspondent's Pertie, Mocrers of War.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 3, 1870.

The movements in Germany against any peace which will not dismember and humiliate France are disturbing Europe. Austria sees her peril at last, and Russia begins to grow anxious. Germany demands simply that there shall be no Power in Europe strong enough to resist her. The report that Russia and Austria have agreed to resist the cession of Alsace and Lorraine to Germany has an alarming vraisemblance. The English friends of Prussia see in it a prospect of the extension of the war, and the English papers are filled with demands for the immediate organization of an English army of at least half a million of men. There is now no organization which extends beyond about 20,000, and even that is of a very imperfect character. But, supposing England were prepared to enter on an European war, would she take the part of Prussia, and aid in the humiliation and dismemberment of her nearest neighbor and most faithful ally? Would she fight against Austria, with whom she sympathized in 1866, and help the despoiler of Denmark? Will England join Germany in a war against France, Russia, Austria and Italy, fighting against her own allies in the Crimea? It does not seem probable.

TONE OF THE PRESS.

The Daily News, more Prussian than the Prussians, fanatically German, refuses to believe in these ill-omened rumors of intervention, and gets very angry about them. Germany, according to the News, is a non-aggressive Power; but the News, as well as Prof. MAX MULLER in the Times, forgets Denmark—forgets the whole history of Prussia. German unity has been made by the needle-gun; this was accepted by Prussia, if it was not willfully provoked by her—accepted without the least effort at constitution, because it placed all Germany in her hands to use and mold to her will. But a German Empire, though it may have no terrors for England, must be a cause of alarm to Austria and Russia. The army that can penetrate France, capture Alsace and Lorraine, and take Paris, can as easily go to Vienna or to Moscow. In short, let Germany be successful against France and no Power in Europe can resist her, or live but by her permission. The other Powers of Europe must then, in self-defense, and as the only means of assuring their own existence, unite against her.

SENTIMENT IN FRANCE.

As to the feeling in France the republican LOUIS BLANC represents it fairly. He says:

"The war, for us, is no longer one of aggression, it is one of self-defense. Its nature has been changed, in our eyes, by the invasion of the French territory, and by the intention, loudly proclaimed, of dismembering it. The Prussians, at present, have no claim, neither for military supremacy nor for domination. They are fighting as sons will to save the life of their mother, and I have no hesitation in saying that the proud, unflinching attitude of France, under the terrible disasters she owes to the blundering despotism which has ruined her, has conciliated her to the sympathies of any gash as comprehend that there is no vain glory, but real greatness, in the power of bearing misfortune with a stout heart and calm courage."

CORRESPONDENTS' PERTIE.

Most of the war correspondents in France have been imprisoned, or ordered out of the country. The Standard has one on the Belgian frontier, who has been able to send some interesting, though rather incoherent accounts of the recent battles. He rode to some point of observation, saw what he could of fights, successes and reverses along a line of several miles, and then sent a courier with his hasty jottings to the nearest Belgian Post-office. Its the same old story—regiments half or two-thirds destroyed, positions taken or retaken, the ground covered with dead and wounded, defeat at one point, victory at another—horrible waste of life, the wounded left for days, perhaps, to suffer from the cold rains, poor people flying in terror from burning villages, wide-spread horrors and desolation.

HORRORS OF WAR.

The Spectator estimates that after the battles of Gravelotte and Rezonville there were fifty thousand wounded left on the ground—a number requiring five hundred surgeons and ten thousand men. London, Birmingham and Sheffield have been stripped of surgical instruments. The dead and dying of wounds and sickness around Metz alone are reckoned at 150,000 men—as many as the adult male population of two cities like Glasgow, or nine hundred populous villages. At the battle of Wœrth one small Bavarian town lost the whole of its manhood in entire generation. In every battle where you read of the loss of half a German regiment, it means the death or wounding of half a district, and sorrow or mourning in every household. It is like the last Egyptian plague, the death of the first-born of every family. It is worse, for hundreds and thousands are nearly as numerous as sons. The invaded suffer more terribly. The invading army not only slays, but plunders. It sends out cavalry on every side, and brings in food and forage for the devouring host. Cattle, horses, grain, meal, are all placed under requisition. Ten Departments of France are in danger, or are threatened with it. The poor people who fly across the Belgian frontier are driven back, unless they bring money to support themselves. And there comes starving and blight and pestilence.

MONADNOCK.

A Mother's Revenge—Cowhiding Scene in Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati Commercial of the 16th inst. says: "There was an extraordinary scene, yesterday, in the front room of the second story of a house on Moore street, between Vine and Walnut, in the cowhiding, by the lady occupying the room, of a sheetmaker who lives in the third story. She had learned that he had several times insulted her daughter, only twelve years of age. Justly incensed, she procured a heavy cowhide—such as dray men use—and having collected some of her neighbors to witness the punishment, called the shoemaker, B. HOEFFER, to come to the front room to fix a window. He came, having no suspicion of what was in store, and, unsuspicious of danger, walked into the room and closed the door. The lady produced the cowhide whip, and demanded to know if he had insulted her daughter. The shoemaker, confounded, stood amazed and incomprehensible. This was a fatal step. While the confusion strengthened the woman's resolution and nerves, the proposition to compromise increased her anger ten-fold. She proceeded to 'lay on' over his body and shoulders, over his face and neck and hands. She flourished the lash around her head and brought it down upon him with all the strength she possessed, while she follow'd him around the room, which he in vain sought to escape. She, in fact, whipped 'the rascal' until her strength was exhausted and her desire for revenge satisfied, and then and not before, she desisted."

PRUSSIA AND AUSTRIA

The Overthrow of the Germanic Confederation in 1866—Political History of Germany During the Four Previous Years.

The last London Athenæum contains an exceedingly interesting review of a work just published by Sir ALEXANDER MALET, entitled the Overthrow of the Germanic Confederation by Prussia in 1866. We quote it as follows:

The appearance of this work is exceedingly well timed. At the present moment, the history of the war of 1866 between Prussia and Austria is interesting in the highest degree, both as laying bare the policy of Prussia, and discovering the means by which that policy can be carried out. The political history of Germany during the years 1863—1866 is the theme of Sir ALEXANDER MALET, late Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary to the Diet at Frankfort; and he also furnishes valuable military information with regard to that part of the war of 1866 in Northern and Western Germany, and devotes a chapter to the military growth of Prussia. Sir ALEXANDER MALET commences with a brief sketch of the Constitution of the Diet of the Germanic Confederation. This chapter, however, would be more appreciated by the antiquarian than the general reading public, and does not call for particular notice. The history also of the spoliation of Denmark, which follows, is in a certain sense a thing of the past—a regretted, but an accepted, accomplished and irreversible fact. The chapters, however, devoted to this subject are interesting both on account of the singularly excellent opportunities possessed by the author for becoming acquainted and forming an opinion of the facts, and also on account of the part played by our own Government, and because it was the first act of the drama which culminated only a few weeks ago in the virtual union of all Germany. It is only fair to Sir ALEXANDER MALET to give the following extract from his preface:

"Time has already revealed many mysteries inexplicable at the period in which the events occurred, and relieved me from the duty of silence on circumstances of which at the time I gained knowledge only from my official position.

"The Schleswig-Holstein question was stated by Lord PALMERSTON to have been one which was only thoroughly understood by himself and another person who at the time of its complete development was dead. We shall not seek, therefore, to analyze the matter, and shall content ourselves with pointing out the dishonesty of the German Powers, the questionable conduct of the Emperor NAPOLEON, and the feeble misleading policy of Earl RUSSELL.

Count BISMARCK embraced the opportunity afforded by the dispute with Denmark to lay the foundation of Prussian supremacy in Germany, and made use of the terror entertained by Austria of a democratic movement, to render her an unconscious accomplice in Prussian aggrandisement. The feelings which actuated Count BISMARCK are plainly, forcibly, and, we believe, correctly stated by the author:

"M. DE BISMARCK's whole soul glowed with the passionate resolve to expel Austria from Germany. It was not in his character to hesitate as to means; and neither moral nor material obstacles deterred him from his object. In fact, he entered on the contest unencumbered by scruples of any kind. To raise Prussia to the political status which he thought that his country had a right to claim, he deliberately entered the path of action with the fervor of a Mohammed enforcing a novel faith, and, like Mohammed, he succeeded."

The first step toward carrying out his object was an association with Austria in regard to the Schleswig-Holstein affair; Austria being simply used to assist in drawing out of the fire chestnuts of which she was destined never to have a share. The co-operation of Austria having been secured, the next step was to make a cloak of the Diet to the high-handed proceedings contemplated; the Diet itself being afterwards cast on the side as a useless and cumbersome garment. The nation is regarded Schleswig as least, partook of an intellectual nature, though it suited the Germans to deny this obvious fact. It was necessary, therefore, to prevent the intervention of France, bound not only by the treaty of London, in 1852, to guarantee the integrity of Denmark, but also by the memory of past friendship, and great sacrifices, to prevent the spoliation of her steadfast ally. Sir ALEXANDER MALET explains the refusal of France to interfere, and this explanation, though founded only on surmise, is probable enough when read by the light of subsequent events. Even the surmises, moreover, of one in Sir A. MALET's position, and possessing special means of information and peculiar opportunities for drawing just inferences, are worthy of consideration. The explanation is given in the following passage:

"There exists, however, a very general persuasion that M. DE BISMARCK had already found means to influence the Imperial mind. It has been intimated that the Emperor had conceded distinctly, at the expense both of Denmark and of Germany, had been more than hinted at, and that visions of possible territorial advantages in secret to France may have dazzled his mind. Be this as it may, it is certain that him, in case Prussia was left free to pursue her own course without interruption. To reasons such as these, it is imagined, may in great measure be attributed the indifferent attitude of the French Government in this question."

The official utterances of the Emperor, through his Ambassador in London, offer the following justification of his conduct:

"The Emperor has always been disposed to maintain the rights of Denmark and resist the spirit of nationalities. It is not to be denied that the national feelings and aspirations of Germany, national feelings and aspirations of Germany tend to a closer connection with the German Confederation. The Emperor would feel repugnance to any course which should bind him to oppose in arms the wishes of Germany. It may be comparatively easy for England to carry on a war which can pay or go to the bottom of the sea, or blockade and seize of ships. Schleswig and England are far apart from each other. But the soil of Germany touches the soil of France, and a war between France and Germany would be found the most incalculable and one of the most hazardous in which the French Empire could engage."

This passage must possess a mournful significance for the French at the present moment. The indirectness and dishonesty of the German sovereigns—for they must all share the guilt, though by a fitting retribution they shared none of the profits of the spoliation of Denmark—are clearly indicated in the pages of the work before us. By means of the opening given by Holstein, they determined and contrived to bring Schleswig within the scope of their operations. It may, however, be admitted, that the impulse given to interference in the matter of Schleswig came from below—was democratic and at the same time sentimental in its nature, and in this differed from the Princes of Germany to insist, without this to their throne. Considering the subserviency of the publication stopped in the Augustenburg dominions, it is evident that it is to their credit, rather than to their profit or discomfiture, that they took the evidence of their sincerity. The following passages are, nevertheless, interesting and deserving of attention. Extract from a letter from the British Ambassador at Vienna to Earl RUSSELL, giving an account of an interview with Count RECHBERG, the Austrian Premier:

"His Excellency is as unwilling as ever to admit that the interests of Schleswig are disconnected from those of Holstein, and consequently of Germany, and he considers that, if they have been united together for so long past, it is impossible for Germany to abandon its right to insist."

Extract from the British Ambassador at Vienna to Earl RUSSELL, giving an account of a subsequent interview with Count RECHBERG:

"That as to Schleswig or Jutland, there was no thought of entering either country."

From the beginning Earl RUSSELL endeavored to separate the questions of Schleswig and Holstein; the right of the Diet to act as it thought fit with regard to the latter Duchy he frankly acknowledged. The Schleswig question he, however, firmly asserted was one of an international nature, and should be dealt with in concert with the signatories of the treaty of London. He for a long time strove to procure the assent of Germany to mediation, but received in return the most insulting neglect of his representations, and a contemptuous indifference, which has done far to lower the influence of British diplomacy on the Continent. It is true that he was not, save in one instance, treated with verbal discourtesy, but in substance, as he complained, he received none. "This is no Prussian—this is my own business."

Sir A. MALET wrote to Earl RUSSELL from Frankfort:

"I cannot but think that the manner in which I am treated by the Prussian Minister, and the contempt with which the representations made by me are received, will not injure Great Britain, but will most injuriously and materially affect my country, and cause that Empire to be regarded as unfriendly, have no power to do us harm."

On one occasion, Sir A. MALET was actually told by the Bavarian envoy to the Diet that he looked on Lord RUSSELL's dispatches as so much waste paper—an expression for which Sir A. MALET, however, expressed and obtained an apologetic disclaimer. The Bavarian Minister was, however, correct in his description of Earl RUSSELL's action. Remonstrance was unavailing. Earl RUSSELL betook himself to threats. Mediatization was threatened by Sir A. BUCHANAN (to Count Bismarck, Nov. 24, 1863):

"Should Federal troops enter Holstein on purely Federal grounds, Her Majesty's Government would not interfere; but should the Duchy on international grounds, Her Majesty's Government may be called on to interfere."

Again, see Earl RUSSELL to Sir A. BUCHANAN, Dec. 26, 1863:

"Any precipitate action on the part of the German Confederation at the present moment may lead to consequences fatal to the peace of Europe, and most injurious to Germany, in particular, in the opinion of such serious nature."

The following extracts from Earl RUSSELL's correspondence with the British Ambassador at Paris, under date Jan. 24, 1864, are worthy of notice:

"Her Majesty's Government wish for the concert and support of France, Russia and Sweden, in order to form a barrier against the aggression in Denmark in the manner of each other's independence.

"I mentioned this subject to Count Walewski, and that I would leave the matter in which such a support could be given in a shape which I had not ventured to suggest to the Queen."

Finding that the threats of England were looked upon as so much waste paper, Earl RUSSELL took lower ground, and made a great and patriotic effort to induce the Prussian Premier to desist from the consummation of Prussia and Russia. These Powers, however, refused that concurrence; and Earl RUSSELL's warlike intentions cooled out of his theory side like Bob Acres' courage. England had, nevertheless, as is apparent from the Danish Ambassador's dispatches, hinted that she would afford unofficial aid if Schleswig were attacked.

"Recently, too, the Cabinet of London gave it to be understood at Frankfort that, in the case of an attack of Schleswig, Denmark would not be left alone."

Schleswig was attacked, and England made no sign.

The history of the operations in Western and Southern Germany in 1866 is clearly told, and forms an interesting supplement to Duncker. Duncker's history of the war, however, is illuminated throughout by the notes of a person of rank and who was personally acquainted with many of the actors in the campaign—and, though a civilian, shows in general both skillful talent for describing and analyzing military operations.

For the political manœuvres which preceded the outbreak of war, and the conduct of Count BISMARCK toward his subservient neighbors, we refer the reader to the book itself. As to the campaign, it was a strong illustration of the inefficiency of the Federal military organization. Other causes, however, equally contributed to failure. Speaking of the troops acting under orders of the Diet, Sir A. MALET says:

"When the Diet's decree of June 14, called these troops into immediate activity, the feelings of Federal officers were those of surprise and indignation; and it was evident that a month would be required to prepare the several contingents to take the field in such an efficient state as to maintain their own honor and that of their country. The commissariat was scandalously ill-provided, and their efficiency proportionately impaired."

The force was divided into two armies; one under Prince ALEXANDER of Hesse, the other, consisting entirely of Bavarians, under the command of Prince CHARLES of Bavaria. The chief command of both Armies was also vested in the latter Prince. The choice of a Commander-in-Chief was unfortunate. Prince CHARLES was old, slow, cautious, and of no experience in modern warfare. The result was, that though far superior in numbers, he was every where pushed by the Prussian Crown forces. By his neglect to send aid to Hanover, moreover, he contributed in great measure to the surrender of the gallant contingent which that Kingdom had placed in the field. Another cause of Prussian success was the treachery or incapacity of Prince WILLIAM of Baden, who commanded the Baden division of the army of the Diet. At the commencement of the campaign he retired from Giessen without orders, thereby uncovering the left of Prince ALEXANDER's army and the City of Frankfort; later on, in the actions on the Tauber, he withdrew without orders, after a merely formal resistance, thereby causing the retreat of the army from the line of that river. Lastly, the next day he, without any cause declined to support a Bavarian division which sent urgent demands for assistance to him. The theory of treachery is strongly supported by a very significant passage in the book under review:

"The humbled Southern States of Germany, with the exception of Baden, sued for peace with France, as a mediator between them and the conquering Power. Baden had good grounds for reliance on the family ties existing between the House of HOHENZOLLERN and that of Baden, and on believing that their State would be leniently treated."

The staff of the Confederate Army does not appear to great advantage in the history of the present campaign. For this apparently the two chief generals are not responsible. As well as other defects, it must be attributed to the violent system of Federal military organization. Prince ALEXANDER of Hesse, in a published journal of the campaign, says:

"Confusion and vacillation and blundering have entered on the command assigned to him. The faulty mobility and diversity of organization of the Federal troops, as regarding the Bavian Army, will not be forgotten by anybody who knows the military constitution by authority of which the army was assembled and himself entrusted with the command, are clearly set forth. The Prince was not even allowed to select the members of his personal staff, but had to accept the officers of the various army being named by the various military authorities in the States which contingents were placed under his orders. These several contingents varied in their strength, in their equipment, in their efficiency, in the calibre of small arms in their artillery equipment. The whole body of the Hessian Corps consisted of a mere village of troops from which excellent results might have been expected, if they had been allowed to be molded into the homogeneity necessary for successful military action. No officer or man of the whole body knew the other officers or men, had ever been in action, and it was barely six years since they were brought together, amalgamated. What results could be hoped for from an aggregation so incomplete of preparation?"

A useful warning is given to us in the foregoing passage, as well as in several others scattered over this book, which show that success in war can only be obtained by careful preparation in advance of peace.

Among the valuable episodes of this war is the treatment of the free City of Frankfort by Gens von FALCKENSTEIN and MANTEUFFEL. In giving an account of this instance of Prussian brutality, Sir A. MALET relates that of which he, being on the spot, was a witness. We quote from the authority that this we should hesitate to accept the confirmation of the newspaper statements of the time. It would be painful to attempt a detail of the various acts of ill-treatment which Frankfort, which had been entered without opposition, suffered at the hands of the imitators of the Huns of the Thirty Years' War. It is sufficient to say that Sir A. MALET amply confirms all that was stated at the time, and to mention merely that Gen. MANTEUFFEL threatened pillage and bombardment if £2,100,000 were not paid by the citizens within twenty-four hours. It is pleasant to be able to state that this scandalous attempt was defeated by the personal intercession of the kind-hearted Queen of Prussia.

In his chapter on the Prussian Army, the author tells a little which those who have studied military matters did not know before. The history of the progress and development of the Prussian military system is not, however, without interest to the general reader. The principal change effected in the system of Prince KRAUSENECK is that by which the service in the reserve is extended from two to four years, and the forming of the Landwehr into a separate army, instead of placing it in division as formerly with the regular troops. With regard to the extension of the service in the reserve, Gen. von MOLTKE gives the following weighty testimony in favor of thoroughly trained soldiers:

"On our side we need everything the army. Where is the Captain, the Lieutenant of Cavalry, of whom we should say? This instant of hesitation, this want in all circumstances cannot be drilled into a man; it must be the fruit of his life."

The advantages of the installation of corps, which has been recommended for our own service, are urged in a passage which well merits the attention of Mr. CARDWELL:

"The highly valuable manœuvres which the French call corps d'armée, is unknown to Prussia, and is maintained than in the Prussian Army. Each regiment, each brigade, each division, has its own recruiting district, and its own Landwehr, whereas serve the time-expired men of the line regiments and of the Guard."

The system of calling up the reserve appears admirable, and may furnish a worthy example for us in the organization of our reserve forces:

"A telegraphic signal from headquarters puts the whole machinery in operation at once. In the Landwehr offices of every village the summons for service instantly reaches, and have only to be distributed. Every individual attached to the commissariat, the hospitals, or field post-office, or any other employ, in case of war, knows his destination beforehand, and only requires notice to present himself."

We will conclude this necessarily imperfect review of a valuable book by giving an extract which it would be, perhaps, well if our military authorities would reflect on:

"In squad and company drill and in gymnastics, which are well calculated to develop the athletic effects, and Captains invariably discharge duties left in the hands of their subordinates, the Prussian Army is, and Army become more familiarized with each other, and this is immensely in favor of the Prussian system, in the view of the latter of active service."

A number of lazy workmen, who won't work, make a habit of going about the streets of Providence, R. I., asking for employment from persons who have none to give. By this shrewd dodge they excite sympathy and procure money to spend at the public houses.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A National Council—Will the United States Ever Recognize the Confederacy?—Letter from Our Paris Correspondent.

On the 9th of January, 1870, the Belgian steamship Ocean was struck by the British steamship Rangoon in fifteen minutes entirely disappeared. Four officers and fifty-seven enlisted men were saved; twenty officers and ninety-five men were lost. On the 6th of February Commander WILLIAMS' body was recovered, and buried with military and naval honors; his body-servant, Mr. PRINCE, was also found, and Japanese divers went down and recovered a few trifles, and that was all.

After a while it was discovered that at low water one of the masts was visible, and the United States Minister, Mr. DE LONG, under date of Feb. 1, 1870, states: "I shall take immediate steps, in concert with the naval officer on this station, for the recovery of the public property."

Under date of Feb. 7, Rear-Admiral HOWAN, writing from his flag-ship, the Delaware, at Hong Kong, says: "I shall proceed immediately to Yokohama. I shall also attend to the recovery of the bodies from the wreck and the property, if divers can be found to undertake the work."

Here are two specific promises made by the doughfaced representatives of the United States in Japan, yet nearly eight months have elapsed and not a solitary step has been taken to recover the dead bodies of those heroes of the war and their personal effects, so dear to the fathers, mothers, wives, children and kindred they have left to mourn their untimely end. Must the stage ever be true that "Republics are notoriously ungrateful?" No strictures are here intended on the course of Admiral HOWAN or Minister DE LONG, but the trouble is this—the hands of our naval commanders are so tied at those distant stations that, unless they possess more than ordinary moral courage, they dare not go out of the strict letter of their duty, and our diplomatic representatives in the East have such miserable salaries that any independence of action, like the incurring of pecuniary obligations to enable them to execute the national behest, would render them simply ridiculous, and would lead to their official ruin. Let the dead be drawn in the cause of humanity, even though the case was like the present one—an historic ship, worth, on a mere money basis, over half a million of dollars, and which can be raised today, if the Government of the United States will only do it.

The death of Admiral FARRAGUT has placed at the head of our navy the son of that old sea-hero of the Nile. Will not Admiral FARRAGUT do something to soothe the sad hearts of those who have perhaps given their all to their country? Will not HOWAN take some steps to remove this national scandal? He is navy of the Central Pacific, and HOWAN and FARRAGUT are cousins. If FARRAGUT and HOWAN will only move in this matter, the Oneida can be raised. The gratitude of a great nation will live in song and story long after new monuments of brass, or bronze, or stone, have disappeared beneath the relentless tooth of time.

The Lincoln Statue at Union Square.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Before the workmen leave the Lincoln Monument, pray beseech the owner to turn the statue around facing the north, (like the Washington statue,) so that it can be seen by the world. Now, in order to be seen, a person must go down to Fourteenth-street, and even then it a number wished to see it a very small crowd would fill the sidewalk. If facing north it could be seen by multitudes going up or down the cars, or by both, and from the park as well. Its present position is an intense failure.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Sept. 17, 1870.

St. Matthew's Church, Jersey City.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your issue of Sept. 12 contains a long account of the churches in your neighboring city, but your reporter's notes in reference to St. Matthew's Church are somewhat defective. As it is well to preserve the history of a parish which, although within less than two miles from the wealthy parishes of New-York, struggled for existence for eighteen years, I send you the following, culled from the journals of the New-Jersey Diocesan Conventions:

Rev. JOSEPH WILLARD, rector of Trinity Church, Newark, visited the "City of Jersey" on Sunday, the 21st day of August, 1808, "performed divine service and preached there; it being the first time that any clergyman of our Church had ever officiated at that place." "By the highly laudable exertions of HARRY CALDWELL, Esq., Major DAVID HUNT, PHILIP WILLIAMS, Esq., and a few other gentlemen, divine service was continued occasionally, from that time till the 4th day of December following," when St. Matthew's Church was duly organized. In the month of March, 1809, Mr. WILLARD again visited the place, and in that year the parish was admitted into the Convention, and "was partially supplied by Rev. EDMUND D. BARRY, of New-York." In 1811 Mr. BARRY reported, through Rev. Mr. RUPP, of Elizabethtown, that "though the congregation is small, and has many difficulties and much opposition to contend with, yet it has, with a becoming zeal, supported its infant establishment, and provided a convenient building for the performance of divine service."

In the years 1812-13-14 no report was made. In 1815 Mr. BARRY stated that "in consequence of an agreement entered into with the Presbyterian congregation in Jersey, the service of our church was performed only on every other Sunday. Circumstances rendered this arrangement necessary." In 1817 Bishop CROSE, (not CROSS,) who had been consecrated in 1816 the first Bishop in New-Jersey, reported to the Convention that Mr. BARRY had removed to the Diocese of Maryland, and in 1818 that "licenses had been granted to JOHN GRIGG and WILLIAM RICHMOND, candidates for orders in New-York, to officiate in St. Matthew's." From 1819 to 1821 no report. In October, 1821, the Bishop visited the Parish, and in his report to the Convention that he had been informed that St. Matthew's was regularly supplied on every second Sunday by Rev. CAVE JONES, of New-York. He visited the church again in October, 1822, when it was probably vacant. In 1824 Rev. E. D. BARRY, who was then D. D., was returned to the New-York and the Bishop stated that he would shortly, at his request, "afford some services to the church in the City of Jersey." In 1826 Dr. BARRY reported that the number of families professing themselves Episcopalians was about twenty, and of communicants about ten, and that the church from a variety of causes, since the reluctant departure of Mr. WILLARD, had become very much reduced, indeed, almost extinct." Now, however, he said, "the prospects are more cheering. The blessing of the Most High seems thus far to have attended my humble labors in this small portion of the Lord's vineyard. The 'Sons of Jersey,' the only church, continue to be encouraging."

Hitherto the means used to frustrate our endeavors in the cause of truth and sound principles appear to have been overruled in our favor. In August, 1827, Bishop CROSE visited the parish, and afterward reported "that to the Convention: "This church, from the unhappy state in which it has been reduced in consequence of deaths and removals, has, within the last two years, under the blessing of God, exceedingly improved, and promises to be permanent." In 1828 Dr. BARRY reported that in consequence of the laudable exertions of the congregation, "aided by some benevolent friends in the City of New-York, they had ... purchased the right to worship in the only place which for many years had been used for this purpose in the City of Jersey. This building (he observed) has lately been fitted up in a neat and handsome manner. Divine worship is performed regularly twice every Sunday." At the number of families was about thirty. It was mentioned in the Times that Dr. BARRY was the preceptor of Bishop CROSE, as well as of Bishop DOANE, and others; but this was a mistake. John CROSE, afterward Bishop, received Deacon's orders in 1816. Mr. BARRY did not come to this country until several years later.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Sept. 15, 1870.

Where Should American Sympathy be in the Present Posture of the Franco-Prussian Struggle.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Are we to have another coalition, or rather another conspiracy of monarchs against republican aspirations like the one against the French Republic in 1792? The late action of the King of Prussia, in refusing to recognize the de facto Government of France, and the utterances of the official Journal de St. Petersburg, as given in the Times of yesterday, Sept. 12, would seem to point that way. The overshadowing position to which Prussia has suddenly attained seems far less formidable to sister monarchies than a great Republic of so warlike and intelligent a people as that of the French at their very doors.

Among the extraordinary political, social and religious phenomena of this nineteenth century, the Jesuits evolve in wonderful results in every intellectual department, in the traditions of mankind, more or more so, from their contrasts with the past, from the attempt of the moment to bring before the tribunal of public opinion the doctrines of the divine right of kings on the one hand, and that of papal infallibility on the other. One the counterpart of the other, and neither more than a mere brutum fulmen, but when they go hand in hand. For each overrides every other consideration, and it would be an incongruous sight, as resulting from the two, to see the head of the Church of Rome walking arm in arm for mutual support, with the head of Protestant Germany, WILLIAM I. of Prussia.

As Americans—at least such of us as can extinguish the name of the term American citizenship—there cannot be, or certainly ought not to be, any question as to where our political sympathies should lie, when the struggle now going forward becomes one between Prussia as a monarchy and France as a republic, particularly if the contest is to be narrowed to one between the two political systems represented in it. So long as the war on the part of Prussia was against Austria, as represented by NAPOLEON III., few thoughtful men could do otherwise than wish success to the Prussian arms, as the representative of a higher order of civil and religious liberty than his opponent. It was difficult, in such a contemplation of things to separate the French people from their ruler, who seemed as much of a "to be annexed" with Prussia; for whatever was aggressive in his acts was applauded, apparently, to the echo by them. As to the House of HOHENZOLLERN, as one of the Times correspondents, the very intelligent CARL BRUNOW recalled in it a few days ago, there is nothing in its past history to enlist American sympathy. Its whole course has been aggressive, and marked with as unscrupulous rapacity as that of the BONAPARTES, whenever stimulated by the lust of conquest. That the Prussian monarchy has always been on good terms with our own Republic, and that the

LOVE AND MURDER.

The Ghastly Sequel Tragedy—Inquest by Coroner Slosson—Testimony of the Jury, Witnesses and others—The Verdict.

CORONER KEENAN yesterday held an inquest at the City Hall in the case of BELLA HOUSEAGE, who was shot by WM. MARSH, at No. 161 Greene-street, on the 8th inst. There were very few persons present. Three of the girls below were examined as witnesses in the present case. They were very reserved, and one of them evinced a decided horror for the position in which she found herself.

MICHAEL R. PETRIE was called, and testified: I reside at No. 161 Greene-street, and was bar-tender for Mademoiselle, who ran the house. The affair happened Friday night, between ten and eleven o'clock. That night I was in the saloon with a gentleman friend of MARSH's, and called for a small bottle of wine; the deceased and two or three girls were there. I went to a closet to get the bottle of wine; MARSH, who had been sitting in the yard, came in and put his head on deceased's shoulder, and said, "Shall I say you killed yourself?" She answered "No, your common friend is." MARSH said the man whose name is GULICK, sided and put between him and the girl, and he turned round; then he put his hand behind him and drew out a pistol, and I thought it blank; I heard a shot immediately, but did not see it fired; then I heard a second shot, and I turned round and looked; he then put the pistol to his forehead and shot himself; he fell on the sofa-bed. Gulick and I ran out, and meeting an officer, carried him back; the officer took charge of the pistol; it was about three o'clock A. M. I had seen MARSH frequently while deceased kept the house, dining or supper at the rear of the house; I saw him the morning of the day of the tragedy, at about the usual hour, with two friends; they left about seven P. M., and returned separately between nine and ten in the evening; deceased came in last; said alone; he sat in the yard for some time; he had been drinking wine nearly all day; I never knew of anything unpleasant taken place between deceased and MARSH.

ROBERT R. GULICK was next called and sworn: I reside at Willett's Point, and am an artificer in Company G; MARSH was an artificer in Company B, but was a good messmate; on Friday, Sept. 9, we started out together; MARSH, BLICKER and I met at about early hour; BLICKER and I came down in the city and met MARSH, who came by the boat about eleven o'clock; on the corner of Greene and Houston, at about 12 o'clock, MARSH said he wanted to have a talk with Bella Houseage; we took a back seat in Florence's saloon, thence to the St. Nicholas; I left them and went off on a spree; MARSH and BLICKER went to Florence's, thence to No. 161 Greene-street; we stayed at the last place from eight o'clock; we left Florence's again, thence to Barney's tavern, on Broadway, opposite Lafayette; MARSH said he had a pistol; we left Barney's about eleven; MARSH said he was going home; I pulled off my boots and shoes, and ordered some wine in the bar-room; that was the last I saw of MARSH; I went to the hall-way, and while there heard two shots; thinking that of the girls said he had killed Bella, I ran down; I saw a screaming and noise going on; that I did; then the third; deceased told me, in the afternoon, when I met him, that he had settled with Bella; MARSH said he was in the business, and that he had been informed by a friend that BELLA was trying to extend his part of the whole of it; he said, "I am done with her now, and I will kill her;" I said, "Don't do that;" he said, "I wonder what anybody care, I don't know where he put the pistol."

LIZZIE STEPHENS, of Newark, N. J., testified: I live at No. 161 Greene-street; I had been there that afternoon on the first time; I didn't know MARSH; but I saw him sitting in Miss BELLA's room in the afternoon; I was there in the evening and I saw MARSH come into the parlor about half-past nine; there were two or three other girls there; we other girls went to the bar to have some wine; MARSH entered, and asked BELLA what she was doing; she answered he was a good fellow; MARSH said he was going to put his pocket slowly and the next thing I knew, he shot her in the abdomen; I didn't see any pistol at all; I was upstairs after I saw her fall and told another girl to go down; I went down; I saw MARSH lying on the floor; I saw BELLA being carried up in her room.

Capt. J. MCDONALD testified that at the night in question he was on duty at Company B, Twenty-fifth Precinct Station-house, he went to No. 161 Greene-street, where he found BELLA lying on the sofa in the front parlor and MARSH on the floor; both were dead; MARSH had a pistol in his hand; MARSH had shot her, and he acknowledged having done so, without giving any reason for his action; the Captain ordered him under arrest with deceased; MARSH said, "Let me alone;" MARSH said, when for what he had done, saying that it was too bad; a short like man, who had served so long in the army and had been wounded seven times on the field of battle, should have to meet a prostitute and have her take his own life, his only regret being his failure to take his own life.

This ended the examination of witnesses, and Dr. WOOSTER BEACH read the statement of J. C. WORTHINGTON, M. D., of No. 39 West Houston-street, who was summoned to attend BELLA HOUSEAGE night of the shooting. On the 16th he made a post-mortem examination of the body, in connection with Dr. JOSEPH CURRMAN, and found that death had been caused by exhaustion from secondary hemorrhage—the result of a pistol-shot wound in the abdomen. The case was then left with the jury, who rendered a verdict that deceased came to her death by a pistol-shot wound, at the hands of WILLIAM MARSH. He now lies dangerously ill at the Penitentiary Hospital. LIZZIE STEPHENS and another girl were sent to the House of Detention, to await the result of his injuries.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

Arrests for Street Robberies—Burglaries—Sudden Deaths.

At an early hour, yesterday morning, Officer RIX, of the Fifteenth Precinct, arrested PATRICK GOGOH at EKUNER's saloon in Bleecker-street, upon a charge of highway robbery on the 9th of June last. About 1 o'clock in the morning GOGOH, with two others, waylaid DAVID H. HENDES, of No. 6 Varick-place, in front of No. 1 Carroll-place, and knocking him down, robbed him of a watch and chain worth $60. HENDES did not see the face of either of his assailants, and was unable to give a description of either of them; but Detective RIDLEY, of the Fifteenth Precinct, taking the case in charge, soon obtained positive evidence that it was GOGOH that committed the crime, and the other two were spectators rather than participants. GOGOH immediately fled from the City, to which he did not return until Saturday, when he came only to find he had not been forgotten, as he was pounced upon and arrested within six hours of his arrival. He was arraigned yesterday, before Justice COX, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, and remanded.

JOHN REILLY was arrested at a late hour Saturday night, by Officer SERGEANT BRILLEY, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, charged with being one of the three persons who assaulted JOSEPH P. HUND, of No. 228 Hudson-street, knocking him down, and robbing him of a silver watch and $12 in money. The prisoner was remanded by Justice COX, of the Jefferson Market Police Court.

JOHN LUTZAK, alias Wilson, of No. 321 East-Twenty-second-street, was brought up at the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Justice SCOTT, on a charge of breaking into the store of JAMES QUINN, No. 180 Second-avenue, and attempting to steal from the same goods. The prisoner was detected in the commission of the offense, and was held to answer.

BENJAMIN COUPER, proprietor of a house on the corner of Broadway and Thirteenth-street, yesterday, in the Yorkville Police Court, charged EDWARD SMITH, alias Joseph Quinlan, of robbing him of his watch and chain, of the value of $125, in his own house, on Saturday night. SMITH, alias Quinlan, went into COUPER's with a girl named Mary Wilson, and, feigned sleep, during which time the prisoner robbed the complainant. The girl, by the way, committed the offense complained of. The girl returned to the house immediately after and gave information that led to SMITH's arrest. He acknowledged his guilt, and was committed to answer.

THOMAS BUTLER was yesterday morning, in the Yorkville Police Court, held to bail by Justice COULTER for committing an assault upon and biting the finger of AARON F. ODELL, of No. 843 Sixth-avenue, a conductor on car No. 18 of the Sixth-avenue line. A dispute arose about the fare and a fight ensued, during which ODELL was badly beaten.

What is to be the Motive Power on the Elevated Railway? Experiments with Hussey's Pneumatic Engine.

When it was proposed to construct the elevated railroad in Greenwich-street, it was agreed that an endless wire-rope carrying "trucks," at equal distances, which, by contact with "buffers" placed beneath the car, acted as propellers, should be the motive power whereby the transit of passengers was to be made. Repeated experiments, made after the roadway was constructed, proved, however, that this means of operating the cars was impracticable. The amount of power necessary to carry a rope of this character, was almost, if not quite, equal to that requisite for propelling the car itself, if directly applied, allowing the latter, when filled with passengers, to weigh about eight tons, as was the estimate. Hence, those interested in the success of the road have been, since then, casting about to find some motor suited to its traction power, and one where the power could be directly applied to the car to be moved. Mr. LOUIS RASSON, of Lansingburg, N. J., an inventor of reputation, conceived the idea of driving the car by compressed air, and for this purpose he invented a pneumatic engine, which has since been put upon the road, and a trial trip of which was made a few days ago with perfect success. Mr. RASSON's engine is capable of making from thirty to fifty miles per hour, with a loaded car, or, in other words, it can make the run from the Battery to Thirteenth-street in about seven minutes time. This engine is in reality a double one, having two cylinders of equal proportions and movement, working laterally, though they might, with equal propriety, be set up in a perpendicular position, if required. The diameter of these is three inches, and the stroke of piston fourteen inches—a slim cylinder being employed in order that advantage may be taken of the expansion of the air. All the valves on these engines are in the cylinder heads, instead of being on the body of the engines themselves, and are of the kind known as "puppet valves." Their position prevents any waste of power whatever. The "cut-off" arrangement is also Mr. RASSON's invention. It works automatically, and with absolute surety, being particularly moved by a "cam," which revolves with the shaft. The valve rod, through the exhaust-pipe is also inserted, in the cylinder-head, and is moved laterally in and out of the cylinder by a small lever at the under edge, with such exactness that ample freedom of escape is afforded for all the air which has done duty as a motor. The induction pipe is at the rear of the car, and has branch pipes leading off in opposite directions, and communicate to the reservoirs, one of which is placed on either side of the car. These, based originally to stand a strain of 3,000 pounds to the square inch, easily and safely carry all the atmospheric pressure necessary, to be used, 100 pounds, or so to the square inch. They are 16 inches in diameter and 8 feet in length. They can easily carry 3,000,000 inches of air, amply sufficient for running purposes; the expenditure of air in the traction of an ordinary car being estimated at about 200,000 inches per mile. The under side of any car, can, however, be so fitted up, without interfering with its use in any respect, as to have a reservoir of 6,000,000 inches of air to draw upon, or enough to run for twenty-four miles. By a simple arrangement within the control of the engineer, the atmospheric pressure is always kept at the same relative standard, even when the continuous working of the engine is suspended. The "cut-off" in the receivers, and thus the equal speed of the engine is maintained until the whole amount of air with which the receivers have been charged is exhausted. A conducting pipe leads the exhaust into a receiver, which may be put in any portion of the engine-car wherever it most conveniently can be placed, so as to reduce the noise accompanying the working of the engine. This motor is also applicable to street-cars, and, in addition to its other advantages, affords facilities whereby a car may be ventilated by means of the exhausted air.

High-Handed Outrage in Brooklyn.

An outrage and robbery were perpetrated about 2 o'clock yesterday morning, by five ruffians on the person of SIMON ABE SCHAFFER, aged thirty-eight years, on Fulton-street, between Main and Water streets. She had, it appears, just arrived from New-York in company with her nephew, who had left her waiting for a street car in the place indicated. The ruffians came up to the lady and her companion, while some held her mouth, the others took from her pocket five English sovereigns. After this one of the ruffians, named MCELDUFF, exclaimed the outrage reached it. Having accomplished their object, the assailants ran off. In a few minutes after, however, Serpt. CLANCY and Officer MCCARTHY, of the Fourth Precinct, having ascertained the facts mentioned, started in pursuit of the ruffians, whom they succeeded shortly afterward in arresting in one of the low resorts on Water-street. The names they gave were Joseph Brown, James Malley, James Regan, Edward McKildnff and John McCord.

The Police and Fire Departments of Philadelphia—Another Message from Mayor Fox.

Mayor FOX, in a special message to the Philadelphia Common Council, yesterday, says:

"I earnestly recommend to you the immediate increase of the Police force, and the adoption of such measures for their action, discipline and efficiency as you may deem expedient and necessary. No time should be lost in maturing the proper legislative measures. The Fall is here, and the season is approaching when vigilance and protection are most needed. It is in the Winter, more particularly that the idle and depraved, who always abound in large cities, are more active in preying upon the community, excited to vice and inflaming in the sake of an excited and indifferent emigration. These are difficult to be found; bad men of dissolute habits, and, to whom crimes of the most atrocious character are not unfamiliar, who, being too well known in their own centres, seek our shores to inflict on by their depredations, and yet it is to be feared that the number of these will be increased by the termination of the present European war. These, and other like contingencies, are in front of us, and we should be prepared to meet them. Unbolted yard-gates and open doors and windows of stores and dwellings, favorable for dark hours of the night, as has hitherto been reported by the officers of the Police, should no longer exist. Our citizens must add their own precautions to the efforts you will make through an adequate and efficient Police force, and then the community will enjoy a better protection than they have had for a long time past. In short, whatever may do, having a tendency to preserve the public peace, to afford protection to life and property, and to bring to summary and condign punishment the perpetrators of crime, will have my prompt sanction and co-operation. I again recommend to you, as I have more than once already done, that there shall be a change in the mode of electing the engineers of the Fire Department. It is an anomaly in the system of government that public officers whose duties are prescribed by law, who are subject only to public control, and who are paid out of the public treasury, shall be elected by the members of private associations. The past has shown that the mode of choice is unsatisfactory. The members too often consider themselves the representatives of those who elect them, and on whom they depend for re-election and continuance in office. This change alone will effect much good. The power already vested in the engineers is ample, if wisely and temperately used, and when their governing officers are chosen by the independent authorities, they represent our Fire Department, (and which, I regret to say, have occurred more than once) will no longer take place. Under such a regulation the Fire Department can be an efficient auxiliary of the Police, while under its present phase it has too often called the aggressive duties of the latter department into exercise. Unless these changes, gentlemen, ought to command your immediate and earnest thinking, as they do, directly upon the peace and character of society, and the safety and comfort of its inhabitants."

MONDAY, Sept. 19—A. M.

The general Trade of the past week was active in nearly all departments. The Exports (exclusive of Domestic Produce) ran up to nearly four and a half millions in value. This was the only department previously marked by any tenacious in the business of the season. The Export of Specie in all descriptions, on the other hand, fell to $810,000, and of this only $112,000 was in American Gold Coin. The Banks have fallen to a comparatively low average in Gold, owing to the continued activity in the Customs demand, which, from the prevailing spirit in the Foreign Merchandise markets, is likely to continue for several weeks to come. Of the $30,000,000 Gold reported in all the Treasury Offices on Saturday, the Government owned $23,000,000, leaving only $21,000,000 Gold Certificates in the hands of the Banks and Importers. Since this report from Washington, the New-York Office has charged off $4,000,000 of these Certificates, and the New-York Banks now hold only about $14,000,000 in certificates, and about $2,500,000 in actual Coin—the whole present average being $14,500,151. With weekly Customs averaging three and a half millions paid into the New-York Treasury Office, and nearly half as much more to the out ports, including the Pacific coast, while only $1,000,000 is being sold out of the Treasury, it is easy to see that our Banks are in a speedy way to be brought below the "point" average of last September, unless the Secretary, on his return to Washington this week, should review his present policy. The case threatens to be greatly aggravated for the banking movement later in the season by the heavy sums of Greenback Notes and other Currency held in reserve by the Treasury, and now amounting to $34,276,000; but as some slight signs have been made in the last few days by the Assistant Secretary, of reducing this balance by extra purchases of United States 5-20s, there is a fair prospect that the mischief to the trading public may be averted. Outside of all considerations affecting the Money market, the Government might save five millions per annum in the way of interest, if the Gold and Greenbacks, now held as ornamental rather than useful hoards in the Treasury, were brought down and kept down to fair working balances.

The Stock Exchange showed more activity last week than during the preceding fortnight, and with this change in speculation came a better demand for Money from the Brokers, the prevailing rate, on Railway collateral, at the close being 6 ⅌ cent, and on balances, voluntarily left with the leading houses, 5 ⅌ cent. The Public Funds improved about ¼ ⅌ cent on the 5-20s of 1867 and 10-40s, and in about the same proportion on other descriptions. The large offerings of 5-20s to the Treasury on Thursday and Thursday week, together $15,000,000, of which the Treasury took only $3,000,000 extra, had the effect, to some extent, of discouraging the advance in the open market.

The Gold Room made no actual advance in price, although some strong parties were free buyers in the Room and also took up the $1,000,000 offered by the Treasury on Wednesday. As the export demand has fallen to a nominal sum per week, the only encouragement to speculate for the rise, if not the only reason why the price should not gradually fall off, is the demand to pay Customs, and even this might at any moment be more nearly equalized with the sales from the Treasury than at present.

The influence of the foreign War has ceased to be talked over or seriously thought of in Wall-street, where the movement of the London Money Market and the rapid return to three ⅌ cent, by the Bank of England, have more significance than the siege of Paris, and more immediate effect upon the foreign Exchanges by retransferring balances to New-York which had been withdrawn on the first alarm of the War, and at the same time renewing to some extent the purchases of American Stocks in this market.

The weekly averages of the Associated Local and National Banks in the Clearing-House of this City, for the week ending Saturday last, Sept. 17, compare as follows with the previous week, and with the corresponding week last year, to which we add the Specie and Currency balances in the New-York offices of the United States Treasury, at these dates, respectively:

The sales of Gold varied scarcely ¼ ⅌ cent from 112 ⅌ cent, as against 112¼ at the close of business on Friday night. The Treasury Office in this City took $2,000,000 during the week for Gold Customs; paid out $97,000 in Gold Interest on the Public Debt, and sold $1,000,000 on Wednesday last at 112½ ⅌ cent. The Shipments of the week are confined, of which $100,000 in American Gold Coin, and the remainder in Gold and Silver bars and foreign Coin. The Banks lost $1,441,165 on their Gold averages; gain $90,000 to Greenbacks, and reduced their Loans $2,168,000. The general line of Deposits is down $3,577,314 from last Monday. The gain in Greenbacks is deemed rather a favorable sign, although moderate in amount. The Gold in Bank is drawn down by the heavy Customs payments into the Treasury.

The business of the day at the Stock Exchange was to a fair amount in the Public Funds and the Railway Stocks. The speculation was, perhaps, less buoyant in the latter than on Friday, but the quotations closed up firm. The State Bonds were steady, and in the Railway Mortgages there was a good inquiry for the old Western first and second mortgages, and for the Central Pacific 6 ⅌ cent Gold Bonds. At the close of the day the following quotations were made, as compared with Friday night. The demand for Money was readily supplied at 6@7 ⅌ cent on call loan to the Brokers. Exchange on London, 109½@109¾ ⅌ cent.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The Prussians have appeared on the heights of Villemeuve and Brunoy, in the environs of Paris, and cannonading has been heard in the direction of Forts Ivry and Charenton, on the south and south-east of the city, forming part of the external line of defence. It is reported that there was a fight yesterday in the woods of Clamart and Meudon, which are on the south-west of Paris, between the Prussians and three French regiments of the line, assisted by some battalions of Mobiles and a battery of artillery, and it is further said that the result was favorable to the French.

It was given out on Saturday, at the office of the French Secretary of the Interior, now at Tours, that the Prussians had crossed the Seine with fifty cannon. Malmaison and Courbevoie are now occupied by the enemy, and so also are Villeneuve Colombes and Nanterre. The Northern Railroad, leading from Orleans to Paris, has been cut between Athis and Juvisy, about eight miles south of Paris, and the railway to Lyons is now entirely in the possession of the Prussians. At Juvisy the Prussians have planted a battery. In this direction heavy firing has been heard. At Etis, another small town on the Orleans road, the line has also been cut. Here there has been sharp fighting. The fort at Villeneuve has been destroyed, the position being considered untenable. The report that the siege train of the Prussians is lost in the mud in the Canal de la Marne au Rhin is again circulated. If this is true, the beginning of serious operations will be considerably delayed.

The prospects of peace are regarded as brighter now than ever before. Yesterday we published dispatches stating that Lord LYONS had gone to the Prussian head-quarters, and that JULES FAVRE was to meet BISMARCK with specific propositions; and this morning we present dispatches stating that Lord LYONS is conducting negotiations between FAVRE and BISMARCK, and that a brief armistice has already been arranged. Our London correspondent telegraphs that the fact that BISMARCK received FAVRE informally is regarded there as indicating a disposition of the King to relax the rigor of his demands.

The mission of the French fleet has utterly failed. Commander WILLAUMEZ complains that all the promises made to him by the Minister of Marine, when the fleet left Cherbourg, have been broken. He was assured that several armor-clad ships would follow him at brief intervals, and that a fleet of transports, with a force of thirty or forty thousand troops, for land service, would speedily join him. Nothing of the kind has been done, and his position has been a difficult and dangerous one. Kiel was not attacked, because the forts commanding the entrance are situated so high that they could not be reached by the ships' guns, and the bay is filled with torpedoes, and has been made unnavigable by the sinking of vessels connected by chain cables. Iron-clads, detached from the Baltic and North Seas, are to protect Cherbourg, Havre and the other ports.

A Bonapartist plot has been discovered in Paris, and several of the Police, and a nephew of Ex-Prefect of the Seine, PIETRI, have been arrested on the charge of being concerned in it. The price of bread-meat in Paris has been fixed by official decree—that of the best cuts at twenty-one cents per pound. The wines and provisions found in the Imperial palace are to be distributed to the sufferers. Minister WASHBURNE has advised the Americans who have determined to remain in the city during the siege to keep within their own apartments, and not to neglect to conspicuously display the American flag.

Our London correspondent intercepts that the explosion at Leon was caused by a guard of the magazine. So the commandant has been exonerated from the charge.... Gen. UHRICH, the heroic commander at Strasbourg, telegraphs to the War Department that he can hold out but a short time longer.... An attempt has been made by a German apprentice to assassinate NAPOLEON at Wilhelmshoehe—that is, the fellow has been arrested with a pistol on his person, which he boldly declared he designed using to kill the Emperor.... Tours is now the actual seat of Government. The Swiss diplomatic arrived there yesterday.... A large number of Fenians have gone from Dublin to join the French Armies.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Baron VON ARNIM, on behalf of the Pope, has explained to Gen. CADORNA that foreign forces raised Rome, and it was impossible to prevent violence to the entrance of the Italian troops. A delay of twenty-four hours was asked that additional influence might be brought to bear on his Holiness. The attack was accordingly suspended, but the troops already encircle the city. The latest advices say that the Pope and the diplomatic corps have taken refuge in the centre of St. Angelo, and the capitulation of the city is hourly expected.... The vessels that have cut at Barcelona, Spain, and the Government has sent a commission to investigate it.

GENERAL.

A house and barn, with a large quantity of hay and corn, were destroyed by fire at Westfield, Maine, yesterday.

The Maine Agricultural Fair commences at Augusta to-morrow, and the exhibition promises to be the largest ever held in the State.

The receipts of fractional currency at the National Treasury for the last week amounted to $419,000; for the fiscal year, up to the present date, they have been $6,416,000.

The California Building and Loan Society proves deficient in its funds to the amount of $60,000.

The population of Chicago proves to be 246,796, an increase of 202,718 since 1860.

Miss MARY C. GREEN, a compositor in the office of the Public Printer at Washington, has been admitted a member of the Columbia Typographical Union of that city. This is said to be the first instance of the admission of a female into an organization of the kind controlled exclusively by men.

Several hundred acres of young timber, and a large amount of cord-wood was destroyed by fire on Friday last, near Stevens' Fund, N. H.

Rev. HENRY DAVIS, D. D., died on the 21st ult., at Danville, Ill., where he was on a visit, at the advanced age of seventy years. He preached a long time in New-York; afterward in Rochester, N. Y.; then in Columbus, Ohio, and at the time of his death was pastor of the First Baptist Church in Rock Island, Ill.

The Panama and West India submarine telegraph cable was completed to Jamaica, on Saturday.

The meeting of the Susquehanna Free Methodist Conference was continued on Saturday. An address was made by Mr. ROBERTS, after which Messrs. W. GOULD, E. W. DOWNING and J. B. FREELAND were elected delegates to the General Conference. The organization was shown to be worth $22,000 in church property.

The funeral of ROBERT HENRY HUNT, the only son of WASHINGTON HUNT, who died at Rome in March last, took place, on Saturday, at Lockport.

Lieut. SHERMAN will return to the Isthmus of Darien in November, to complete the survey for all possible routes for a ship-canal in that region.

A defalcation in the Custom-house at Baltimore is reported. Rumor places the loss at $140,000 to $200,000, and the matter is to be investigated by a Special Agent of the Treasury Department.

Pay-master-General BUCK, U. S. A., was run over by an express train in Baltimore, yesterday, and had his leg broken.

SHERMAN G. WHEELER, a prominent grain dealer of Chicago, is under arrest, at Lockport, charged with misappropriating money.

The census of Syracuse shows a population of 43,051.

The Commissioners of the German Theological Seminary, (Presbyterian,) of Newark, have demanded assets from the three Presbyteries of Newark, North and Orange and Elizabeth, for the endowment of the School.

The Germans in Our Political Campaign.

There can be no question that the Republican Party are to gain, in the approaching political campaign, an important German vote. We hear on every side that the German-Americans, who have hitherto been members of the Democratic Party, have become disgusted with the course of the Democratic leaders, and journals on the Franco-German question, and are coming over in large numbers to the Republican side. It is well understood by them, that the leading organs of the Democratic Party have stamped the cause of the "Fatherland" with every weapon of sarcasm and abuse. The World has never ceased vilifying the motives of the Germans, and using every possible argument to draw American sympathy from the Prussians. The Republican journals on the other hand, have almost unanimously sympathized with the struggle for German unity. From the beginning they have condemned the means which LOUIS NAPOLEON used to acquire power, and the oppression he has exercised over free thought and personal liberty. They opposed him when seeking to acquire a foothold for imperialist ideas in Mexico, and would undoubtedly have urged the nation to war rather than submit to a permanent French occupation of that unfortunate country.

When NAPOLEON, on the 15th of July last, began his sudden and uncalled for war against North Germany, the Republican public men and newspapers felt and denounced it as an unprovoked attack on a peaceful neighbor; they regarded the struggle as in fact one between Caesarism on one side, and a people just beginning a course of constitutional liberty on the other. Between NAPOLEON and King WILLIAM, personally, they had not much to choose, but one represented despotic ideas, and the other for the moment the mighty efforts of a free community toward unity, which we know from experience to be the path to liberty. Moreover, Germany embodied, to our minds, the free ideas of the age; freedom of thought and constitutional progress; its army was a citizen army, and its strength, like our own, lay in popular education. Its Teutonic virtues were our own pains-taking industry, a pure family life, and the peerage which, though not often brilliant, grew firmer from disaster. These were some of the reasons which brought the Republican Party into sympathy with Germany in this great struggle. The sympathy would have been equally deep had honest had no German-Americans existed.

But we rejoice at the coincidence, because it shows, what all reflecting persons have long felt, that for a German-American to be a "democrat" is an inconsistency, both logical and unnatural. The two really have nothing to do with one another. The American Democrat has always sympathized with arbitrary power. He ought to be called the American Tory, or Junker. He has a secret love for DISRAELI, and a fellow feeling for LOUIS NAPOLEON. He adores the slaveholder. The German-American is of necessity a hater of tyrants and an enemy of oppression. The Democrat flatters the priesthood and believes in the temporal power of the Pope. The German (even if a Roman Catholic) would overthrow both. The American Democrat hates new ideas and "reforms," and always opposes any great popular measure, whether sanitary or moral, which will make the masses more intelligent or comfortable. The German believes in progress and popular improvement, and the elevation of the masses. The Democrat dislikes free schools, and would make them ecclesiastical. The German admires them, and would secularize the church schools. The Democrat has no ideas or a single principle in his party, and merely clings to a great name. The German is in sympathy with all the fermenting ideas of the time, and does not at once recognize that the sacred name of "Demokrat" in America is but a lion's skin.

This war has revealed these incongruities in the position of German-Americans within the Democratic Party. They see they are strangers there. They are in the wrong place. What can a German "Demokrat," who has fed, as upon mother's milk, on ideas of liberty for all men, and of the progress of humanity, have to do with men whose idol was the slaveholder, who admire LOUIS NAPOLEON, and whose only aim is so to beguile an ignorant populace, as to enjoy fat offices.

The true democrats of the United States are the Republicans. Their career has been a glorious series of struggles and victories for the rights of man. They have always upheld the people against oppressors in any form. Their animating enthusiasm has been their love of freedom, and sympathy everywhere with true liberty. To them, the German-Americans rightly belong; in their ranks, they will find a true harmony, and nowhere will their principles and services be so gratefully and heartily recognized, as in the Republican Party.

The Future of Spain.

So all-absorbing are the details of the Franco-Prussian war, that European telegraphers have of late ignored with almost curious persistency the events transpiring in the Iberian peninsula. The course pursued by the Spanish people, in view of the French defeats, happens to possess such great interest for all who desire to see republican institutions established in the States of Continental Europe, that this silence is most unsatisfactory. The position of affairs, as described in the latest advices, appears to be this: The people generally are in favor of a republic, but prefer a prolongation of the Regency, as now administered, until certain that their action will not be interfered with by Prussia. Gen. PRIM and the Regent, on the other hand, disposed to re-establish a monarchy, are restrained from overt action, partly by an uncertainty as to the support they will receive from King WILLIAM, and partly by a knowledge that the least spark will fire the train of republicanism. In the latter case, if not aided from without, their power and projects will vanish into thin air. The General, very foolishly, made a diplomatic move, which has not tended to increase popular faith in his intentions. Before the decisive successes now enjoyed by Prussia had been achieved, he sent an envoy to Count BISMARCK to inquire whether he would be disposed, as he professed the Spanish Government was desirous he should be, to recognize Prince HOHENZOLLERN's claims; but he has also been in communication with the Ex-Queen ISABELLA, urging her to allow Prince ALPHONSE of BOURBON to return to Madrid, promising in such a case to secure his eventual coronation as King of Spain. In singular contradiction to these steps, he has been heard to use language implying that he has considerable sympathy with the Republicans. Thus Bourbonist, Republican, and supporter of the Hohenzollern interest by turns, he is naturally enough, looked upon with suspicion by each party, and is fast losing the position to which his undoubted ability had raised him as virtual dictator of the Kingdom.

But Spain is suffering from other internal disorders than those arising from the differences between Republicans and Monarchists. The ubiquitous Carlists are doing their best to take advantage of the disturbed condition of affairs, and, while effecting nothing of importance, continue to keep up a perpetual guerrilla warfare which harasses the Provisional Government, and destroys the security of the districts in which they appear. In any case the peasantry are sure to suffer, whether supporting or resisting these unwelcome marauders. But a few days since a body of Carlist troops was captured near Navarra, and a band who attempted to destroy a railroad in Biscay were put to flight by the Government troops. Yet the same telegram informs us that they were still in force at Caballos, in the Basque provinces, and likely to cause some trouble. It is impossible to feel any sympathy with these reckless disturbers of the peace, to whom any Government is alike distasteful which does not hold out hopes for their own leader. In addition to all this, the adherents of the Duke of MONTPENSIER have got up a small conspiracy on his account; and at feud with all parties are the brigands who infest certain districts, plundering and murdering without discrimination. Well may Spain exclaim, "Deserts lie before anarchy!"

A late telegram contained the brief intimation that "a crisis in the Spanish Ministry is imminent." No particulars are given which would enable us to judge of its gravity. But it is safe to conclude that the issue is, or soon must be, that of republicanism against monarchism—of the populist will against that of Prim and his colleagues. Perhaps it is too much to hope that a crisis and [illegible] this will come [illegible] deceased. Now and then [illegible] at long intervals—a circumstance that indicates the tenacity with which companies fight the parties who seek to recover from them sums promised by the policies. One of these long-contested cases, recently decided, arose out of the default of the insured in respect of the payment of premium,—and properly ended in favor of the Company. But as a rule, the companies rely upon a plea of falsity of statement, suppression of some material fact, or fraud, on the part of the insured, at the time the policy was issued. It is quite probable that the plea is, in many instances, tenable. There is an inclination among large numbers to withhold from a company information essential to its guidance; and as it seldom there is a degree of deception which a loose medical examination greatly facilitates.

But if misstatements are often resorted to by individuals seeking insurance, or if fraud is often employed without scruple where corporate funds are concerned, we must remember that the companies themselves are largely to blame. They do not sufficiently discriminate in the acceptance of lives. Keen competition for business has begotten a certain recklessness in its pursuit. Agents earn enormous commissions easily, without pausing to consider the eligibility of the risk they procure. A large proportion of the medical referees are utterly unfit to conduct a searching examination, while another large proportion, we fear, are careless, not to say corrupt. Again, the inquiries addressed to friends are treated by the companies as little more than a formality, instead of being a very important means of verifying the applicant's representations. Much of all this is, as we have said, attributable to a wild desire for business. Much also is traceable to the reliance which the companies place upon the warranty which underlies the contract, and upon the protection which is thus secured through the law.

Here it is that the companies are in the wrong. Their duty is to institute the fullest possible investigation before issuing a policy, or while the insured yet lives,—not to reserve the scrutiny until the insured ceases to be able to vindicate his statements. A life-insurance policy should be in its way as good as a Government bond; it should be a valid promise to pay, on which the insured and his family might rely with unwavering confidence. If it have not this characteristic, it is a delusion and a snare; the money paid as premiums might be more profitably deposited in a savings-bank. There is no reason why this absolute certainty should not be attainable. If the companies will exercise more care at the outset,—if they will place more reliance upon the employment of trustworthy agents and capable medical officers, and of the means they possess for testing the truthfulness of the applicants' statements,—they will have less occasion for invoking the aid of lawyers to combat the claims of widows and orphans. Unless indisputability can be introduced into a life-insurance policy, that instrument will lose much of its value.

American Absentees.

The banishment of Americans from Paris on account of the siege may be but temporary, and, for the sake of the new-born Republic or of humanity, we cordially wish it may prove so. But in the interest of our traveling countrymen themselves and of the homes they desert, we might well desire the event to be otherwise. An indefinite postponement of the renewal of Parisian delights would, we are sure, do our absentees no harm. That usually luxurious capital may in one sense be the Paradise of good Americans, but it is to be feared that too often in another it has proved their Eblis. The opportunity afforded by the advance of King WILLIAM's iron battalions for taking into serious consideration the effect of Paris on American morals and manners, should not be lost sight of. For many years the amount of American time and money spent in that city has probably exceeded the aggregate of both expended in all other European capitals. How far the outlay has been useful, or the reverse, constitutes a legitimate inquiry.

We presume that, without implying Pharisaism in the observer, it may be fairly said that the majority of people who sojourn long in Paris become looser of morals as well as lighter of purse. It may be possible to touch pitch and not be defiled. It is less easy to dwell many days amid a remarkably sensual people,—a people whose strong appetite for pleasure has long been stimulated by the policy of their Government,—without taking on some of the same luxurious proclivities. Habits of extravagance are adopted with like facility. The American who has lived in Paris may be more a man of the world than when he went there, but neither his intellectual nor his moral fibre is apt to be strengthened by the experience. In many cases one of the results is that of making him discontented with his own country. He finds the society, the literature, the cuisine of home, alike distasteful to him. He compares the old and the new, to the disadvantage of the latter, falls into the common error of thinking the personal comfort or taste of the few a matter of greater consequence than the liberty and equal rights of the whole, grumbles a little—and goes back again.

In Ireland it has been the complaint of centuries that the money made on the soil has not been spent there. The landlords have taken their rents to support themselves in London or other places where the society has been more to their fancy. A striking consequence of this has been that, as with land where the manure produced by its crops is not returned to it, the country has been more and more impoverished. With a nation so rich as our own, and in which the evil has been on a lesser relative scale, such injury is not so material. Still it exists and is by no means to be left out of the account by those who would arrive at an approximate estimate of the effect of such habits. A certain number of thousands of dollars—perhaps millions would be the exacter unit of measurement—are or have been expended yearly by American residents and sojourners in Paris. Of course if this money were spent at home the country would be by just so much the richer.

The political disadvantage is perhaps more serious than the pecuniary or even the social one. Dissatisfaction with republican government, and a craving for the pomp and glitter of imperialism, have usually been brought away by Americans from Paris as regularly as a taste for French cooking or knickknacks from the Palais Royal. So customary has this been, that before a returned native opens his mouth, in nine cases out of ten we know that he will revile democracy and praise the order, the splendor and the comfort of the Empire. That such animadversions or comparisons are not often favorably received, is a fact which does not altogether destroy their effect. Advocates of republicanism have remarked from time immemorial how the monarchical principle, like vice, is apt to be "first endured, then pitied, then embraced." Recent events, indeed, may cool the ardor of American Imperialists; but there is no absolute certainty as to when they may have in Paris a fresh object of admiration to dazzle and mislead them.

So far as opportunities for esthetic development or means of physical comfort go, we are really getting in most respects to a point which will warrant us ere long in believing ourselves abreast of Paris, or of any other European city. It is in these points only that we have hitherto been inferior, and they have, therefore, furnished our absentees with their soundest plea of justification. Let us hope that in all the appliances of a true and progressive civilization in art as well as in all healthful refinement, the great cities of the United States may soon equal, if they cannot surpass, the beautiful and unfortunate capital that to American eyes has had such transcendent charms. When this is done our people of wealth and leisure will cease, we may trust, to seek for advantages abroad that can be more conveniently and patriotically enjoyed at home.

The rumors of peace negotiations continue to be as uncertain as the advance of the hostile army is unmistakable and well defined. The occupation of the heights of Villeneuve and Brunoy by the Prussians; the abandonment and destruction of the antiquated fort of Vincennes by the French, and the statement of hard fighting yesterday and Saturday around Paris, all point to an early attack in force upon the outer line of defenses, and cast discredit upon the rumored armistice. The position of Gen. DUCROT, with eighty thousand men in the woods of Meudon, shows the determination on the part of the besieged to retard as effectually as they can, the formation of the Prussian line of attack. While keenly desirous of peace, the Provisional Government is evidently conscious of the fact that a display of weakness will only serve to make the conquerors more exacting, and the resolute attitude of the capital, however much its necessity may be deplored, must rouse, if anything will, the untried energies of the French people, and render them worthy of their Republican predecessors of 1792.

The dream of Italian patriots is close to its realization. Rome is about to become the capital of a united Italy. A year ago the event would have been watched with eager interest by the whole civilized world. Today its proportions are dwarfed by the greater drama which is being transacted on the banks of the Seine. It is not the first time in the history of the Papacy that the guns of St. Angelo have become the guardians at the head of the Church, but no Pope ever retired behind those frowning battlements with a darker presage of coming disaster than does PIO NONO. The popinjays are ready to fraternize with the Italian troops, there is dismion and distrust among the Papal soldiery, the oldest son of the Church is a prisoner, and no power in Europe will strike a single blow to avert the imminent extinction of the temporalities of the Holy See. Devout Catholics may believe that the Church will be stronger and purer from her exclusively spiritual eminence than she has ever been when holding a double sceptre. It may be safely presumed that thier opinion is not shared by the Pope himself.

Mr. WASHBURNE, the United States Minister to Paris, may have offended somewhat against the rigid etiquette of diplomacy, by the warmth with which he greeted the Republic of France, and the earnestness with which he deplored the continuance of the war. But his words, however warm, reflected correctly the feeling which has sprung up in this country since France discarded NAPOLEON and his dynasty, and once more appealed to the liberty-loving instincts of its people. The coldness which has characterized some of the European monarchies in regard to the change, the ill-concealed aversion which is apparent in other quarters, and the truckling, soulless course pursued by England,—are so many reasons for greater cordiality and positiveness on the part of this country. We can readily believe, therefore, that Mr. WASHBURNE's action is heartily sustained by the President and the State Department, and we are sure that it has the approval of the great body of the American people.

When the Prussian investment of Paris shall have fairly commenced, reliable news will necessarily become fragmentary and uncertain. A troop of Uhlans can effectually sever in a single day the telegraphic communication between the capital and the outer world. Many of the wires are subterranean, but the Prussians are, without a doubt, as correctly informed about their position as they are on every other point of French topography. The Prussians, it is true, carry with them a staff of electricians, who stretch along every mile traversed by the army, the wires that connect it with Berlin and the German arsenals. But the Prussian official dispatches, however accurate, cannot, to judge by past experience, be expected to be copious. This will be no obstacle to imaginative correspondents in London and elsewhere giving elaborate details of the progress of hostilities, but it will certainly diminish the amount of available facts.

Should the present negotiations for peace have a successful termination, the internal politics of Germany will divide the interest of Europe with the completion of the republican revolution in France. The first indication we have of the feeling in South Germany with regard to union is that Bavaria is disinclined to terminate the Confederation. The strong pro-Prussian sentiments of Baden are well known; Wurtemberg will probably be found quite disposed to link her fortunes with those of North Germany; and the Duke Saxe-Coburg can only follow the example of their larger neighbors. But as Bavaria in reality at the head of South Germany, as her population and military age are more than equal to the other five States combined, and as her action does during the present war have been probably greater than those of any other Power engaged in it, her reported balking in the path of union has an important bearing on the future of Germany. It is extremely probable that the zeal and official repudiation of a desire for union represents the sentiment merely of the Court and Ministry. These are well known to be strongly swayed by Austrian and Catholic influence, both of which are naturally opposed to Prussian ascendency. The Bavarian people have, in common with the rest of Germany, come through the baptism of fire that so often attends a nation's birth, and their will is, in this instance, likely to prove stronger than that of their rulers.

There is a Southern Democracy which the fire-eaters do not control. The Louisiana Democratic State Convention, sitting at New-Orleans, the other day, decided, by what the Times of that city calls an overwhelming majority, on admitting colored delegates to full participation in its proceedings. "Nine-tenths of the parishes," we are told, "voted in favor of the proposition," which practically consists the Democrats of Louisiana to the recognition of negro enfranchisement and the measures which that involves. It is a sign of progress which we are glad to chronicle. We expect, however, to see the brethren of Louisiana excommunicated as base-born bastards by the irreconcilables of Alabama and the fools of Indiana,—both of whom still cry out that this Government is for white men only.

The corrected and official statement of the number of French troops who capitulated at Sedan, throws a new light upon the resources still available for the defense of France, and affords a very suggestive commentary on the statements transmitted by certain correspondents. Assuming MCMAHON to have led 120,000 men into the Argonne, and taking the losses of four days' fighting on the Meuse and before Sedan to have been 20,000 men, we have still, after deducting the 10,000 who gave themselves up, an army of 40,000, a large proportion of whom probably occupy Sedan, while the remainder have made good their retreat to Paris. BAZAINE's lately reported presence at Sedan thus assumes a new significance, and in conjunction with the 4,000 men whom CANROBERT led out of Metz, the troops still on the Meuse may be able to do effective service in interrupting the Prussian lines of communication, and necessitating the employment of a considerable body of troops to watch them. The veracious correspondent who has sent so many startling tales from "the King's head-quarters," boldly asserted that 100,000 men capitulated at Sedan. As the correct statement comes from the Prussian head-quarters, a discerning public will probably conclude that a writer distinguished for apocryphal interviews, and equally apocryphal news, might as easily date his dispatches much nearer home.

Iowa still covers its name with disgrace by facilitating resistance to judgments of the United States Circuit Court, providing for the collection in certain counties of sums required to pay bonds issued by them in aid of railroads. Muscatine and Louisa Counties are particularly compromised by repudiation, but the whole State suffers because of the facilities its Courts have afforded for dishonest and shameless opposition to the discharge of just debts. An application has been made to Justice MILLER, of the United States Supreme Court, and of the Circuit Court of the United States for Iowa, for an injunction to prevent the requisite collections by the Marshal. Every point raised was, however, decided adversely by Judge MILLER. And now the Louisa County repudiators formally make known their purpose to resist the collections ordered, by the Court! It was in reference to these cases that President GRANT, writing to Gen. DIX, asserted his determination to employ whatever force might be required to enforce the law. The Louisa County tax-payers have raised an issue that must be met; and we doubt not that the Federal authority will meet it in the only satisfactory way. Iowa may be reconciled to its disgrace,—but its creditors are entitled to their money.

While the cohesion of a united Germany has grown with every day of the prosecution of a common warfare, the unification of Austria seems to be as distant as ever. The advisers of FRANCIS JOSEPH are sufficiently acute statesmen to know that troubled days await the Empire in the immediate future. When the Main ceases to be anything more than a geographical limit, there will be considerable danger that the Elbe and the mountains of Bohemia should, in like manner, no longer divide different nations. Every effort was made to induce the Czech Deputies, who are elected by the non-German populace of Bohemia, but who refuse to sit till national autonomy is conceded to them, to enter the Reichsrath just opened. It seems, however, that the Emperor has still to lament, in his speech at the opening, the still imperfect representation. The Austrian Cabinet has before it the awkward alternative of either embracing the centralist or German policy, and alienating the nationalities, or of persevering in their endeavors to conciliate the latter, and so throwing their German population into the arms of Prussia. The probable creation of a German Empire, extending from the Inn to the Vosges, will render the task of holding the balance even much more difficult than ever.

The foreign sympathies of the Democracy are all-embracing. If the Illinois State Convention may be accepted as an exponent of the party's views. In their eagerness to extend a "hearty welcome" to Republican France, the Illinois Democrats actually declared that they "commended the Administration of the Federal Government for the recognition so far accorded to the French Republic." The Germans also receive their share of compliment, which takes the shape of "heartiest good wishes" for "their endeavor to bring about a united country," and congratulation "on their valiant conduct in the pending war." The insurgent Cubans are not forgotten; and as for Ireland, the Convention asserted that it is "not unmindful of the people" of that island, or "of the wrongs they have been called upon to endure." Nay, further, the Convention expresses the hope "that the tocsin of liberty now sounding has struck the hour of their redemption," which should be nonsensical enough to please every Fenian. It is evident from these citations that the Illinois Democrats attach great importance to the foreign policy of their party, and are determined that there shall be no mistake about it. Perhaps to their anxiety to be explicit upon these points should be ascribed their silence in regard to certain domestic questions, concerning which there has been much controversy. It is unfortunate that before traveling round the globe with their sympathies on their sleeves, they did not take time to tell the country where they think about reconstruction, the constitutional amendments, and cognate questions. If they consider these "dead issues," why not say so?

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

THE SEASON AT WALLACK'S.

We observe that the Fall and Winter performances at Wallack's Theatre will be commenced on Monday evening next. An admirable representation of "The Rivals" is thus to be given, for we cannot imagine that so strong a distribution of parts as the bill makes clear will suffer the claim of the entertainment to such a designation to be ineffectual. It will be given, let us say, in a new theatre. The work of renovation now being completed is indeed, of the most complete kind. Entrances, auditorium and stage are being transformed alike by carpenters, machinists, painters and upholsterers. The result of the toil of these worthy people, whose plans were long ago submitted to Mr. LESTER WALLACK, and modified and approved by him, will, from present hints, be most gratifying. The main road of entry is being frescoed, as to the walls, in lavender shades enriched with crimson, panelings, with ornamental centrehooms, forming the larger features of the design; paintings of blue will adorn the ceiling. The walls of the vestibule and inner lobby are being done in drab and blue. The blue, by the way, is a new tint, which a special and unvarying hue by day and night makes worth noticing. Within, a thorough redecoration of the auditorium awaits the eye. The large designs which lately caused the panelist so upper smaller ones in reality was, have vanished, and a rich tapestry of amber and gold on a lozenge material, with illuminated borders, and a wainscoting of jasper marble and gold, in moldings of walnut, have replaced them. For beauty of color and novelty of construction, no upholsterer's contribution toward the showiness and neatness of the interior arrangements of a theatre which we can remember equal this one, in the Pompeian style, and the most recent production of Messrs. SOLOMON & HAKE. There is no need, of course, to mention the now accomplished incident of repainted and regilded pillars, seats and balcony iron-work. But it is to be observed that two large chandeliers have been introduced into the parquet, depending from above, and that the number of lights rescuing that part of the place from gloom has been augmented by one-half. Leaning one's head from amid the orchestra chairs, a newly built dome is perceived. It is sixteen feet in height, and sixteen feet in diameter, the interior being a firmament of blue bespangled with gold stars, and illumed by 100 jets of flame. Bright paneling surround the dome, which will confer too much light and ventilation upon the spectators to be unheeded. The stage has been relaid from the footlights to the rear wall of the building. The proscenium has been enlarged by the removal of belittling upper cornices, and greatly improved by the changing of the white pillar on either side into a smooth shaft of jasper marble, in alto-relievo, on a concave recess hung with golden cloth. A new drop, finally, is at present receiving the finishing touches of Mr. JOHN HELLMUTH, Jr. Its aspect will furnish positive relief after years of contemplation everywhere of the familiar red drapery. From between folds of crimson velvet, gathered up on the sides, a curtain of rare white lace, with an ornate medallion in the centre, mantles another curtain of silk, whereof the color is Solferino lace. The border is of gold fringe. We have only to add to this outline of the labor now being performed for the benefit of Wallack's Theatre, and to be ended before the approaching week sets in, that the scenery to be used will come direct from the paint-room.

TO-NIGHT—ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In addition to the Nilsson concert to-night, a change of performance at Wood's Museum, with Mrs. SCOTT-SIDDONS as Rosalind, in "As You Like It," is to be noted. A partial change of bill at LINA EDWIN'S will bring before the audience Mr. STUART ROBSON in the Burletta of "Camille."

Musical.

NILSSON CONCERTS.

The first of the Nilsson concerts occurs at Steinway Hall this evening. Mlle. NILSSON will sing "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," the "Mad Scene" from "Hamlet," and "Ah! Fors'è-lia," from "La Traviata." Miss CARY's solo piece will be "Ah! Quel Giorno," from "Semiramide," while Signor ERNSOLT will interpret "Le Spia," by ABERT, and Signor VERGER will render the romanza in the third act of "Un Ballo." M. VIEUXTEMPS is to contribute two compositions of his own to the entertainment. We mention, of course, but a portion of the attractions of the bill.

GERMAN OPERA.

"The Huguenots" will be sung in German, to-night, by the artists of the Stadt Theatre.

Marie Seebach.

Mme. MARIE SEEBACH, with her suite and dramatic company, arrived here, yesterday, in the Iowa. She was received on her arrival by Mr. GRAU, and conducted at once to the apartments that had been secured for her at the Belvidere House. Her debut in America will probably take place on Thursday evening of this week, at the French Theatre, on Fourteenth-street. The sale of tickets for the opening performance begins this morning. Just at this moment an outline of the life and deeds of this artist will, perhaps, interest our readers, and it is, therefore, subjoined:

MARIE SEEBACH was born on the 24th of February, 1827, at Riga, in Russia. Her parents—both German—were opera singers. Her father was the son of a physician, who, though distinguished in the medical profession, had yielded to an overpowering love for the actor's art, thrown "physic to the dogs," and adopted the calling of the stage. Her mother was the daughter of Herr BLUMENAUER, an author of much local distinction in his time, and a gentleman of fine imagination, delicate sensibility, and liberal culture. Both parents were honored in private life and admired as artists. The mother was the intimate and cherished friend of HENRIETTA SONTAG—beautiful, gifted, deeply loved and sadly lamented—with whom, at the Conservatory of Prague, she had won the first prize for proficiency in the elements of music. She died when her daughter MARIE was only six years old, while her second daughter, WILHELMINA, was yet an infant. The father, FREDERICK WILLIAM SEEBACH, survived his wife twenty-one years, dying at Cologne, in 1864. He was an honorary citizen of that place, and he is still remembered there, not only as the admired favorite of the nobility, but as the author of many works of reputation. It is natural that she should desire to repeat upon the stage of America the toil and the triumph that have made her eminent upon the stage of Europe. That desire leads her to these shores. She comes hither under auspices of the most hopeful and promising character. To Mr. GRAU's sagacity and enterprise our stage is indebted for the great RISTORI—the RACHEL of Italy, in grandeur and in fame. To the same wise foresthought and energy our stage will now owe the RACHEL of Germany, MARIE SEEBACH.

WASHINGTON.

Provision for an Election in Georgia—Surveys at the Isthmus—Political Prospects in Ohio—Admission of a Woman into the Typographical Union.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—Information from Atlanta, Ga., is to the effect that the Republican majority in the Legislature, co-operating with Attorney-General AKERMAN and Gov. BULLOCK, will provide for an election in that State before the 1st of January, 1871, which will be a literal compliance with the generally understood interpretation of the act of Congress admitting Georgia to the Union, but and experience has demonstrated that the Election laws of Georgia, being those bequeathed to the State by her Confederate rulers, are wholly insufficient to secure a fair and free expression of all the voters in the State. The violence, intimidation and murder which attended the campaign of 1868 are evidence of the much-needed reform in this respect, and it is a good sign that Attorney-General AKERMAN, who is still in Georgia, has been called upon to aid the Legislature in framing such laws as will, with the aid of the statutes passed at the last session of Congress, secure a fair election. This will necessitate a postponement of the election until the latter part of December, a time when will be more favorable for the colored voters, as at that period they are free from the restraint imposed by labor contracts.

SURVEYS AT THE ISTHMUS.

In addition to the expedition in survey the Tehuantepec and Nicaragua routes for a ship-canal, for which Congress made an appropriation of $50,000, Lieut.-Commander SHUFELDT will return to the Isthmus of Darien in November to complete the survey of all the possible routes for water transit in that region. The operations of Commander SELLIDGE's party last Winter convinced them that a practicable canal passage was not likely to be found across Darien, but it is desired to settle the question absolutely by actual surveys, and the expedition will return for that purpose and explore some ground which they were unable to traverse last season.

REPUBLICAN PROSPECTS IN OHIO.

Gen. GARFIELD, who has been in the city for a few days, speaks quite confidently of the result of the approaching election in Ohio. He says the discussions thus far have caused the people to understand their appreciation of the work done by Congress at its late session, particularly the work of the last month, and that there is no reason to apprehend any material change from former elections. He regards it possible that the Republicans may lose one district in the State through divisions therein, but considers it equally possible that they may gain one of the Cincinnati districts now represented by a Democrat.

FEMALE MEMBER OF THE TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

The Typographical Union of the District of Columbia last night unanimously admitted to membership a female compositor, Miss MARY C. GREEN, of Ohio, now employed at the Government Printing-office. The same Society have never yet been able to determine whether they will admit to the membership of one of Fabius DOUGLASS, who cannot change the color of his skin.

In August last, the safe of J. W. DODD, No. 179 Newark-avenue, Jersey City, was robbed of $826 by a negro named ROBERT FLEMING. The detectives have since been on his track, and on Friday Detectives CARROLL and STRATFORD, of the Jersey City force, succeeded in arresting him at Malden, Mass. He was brought to Jersey City and lodged in jail yesterday morning.

POLITICAL.

LOCAL POLITICS.

Temperance Political Meeting at Cooper Institute—Address of Hon. C. C. Leigh.

A meeting of the friends of temperance was held in Cooper Institute last evening for the purpose of listening to Hon. CHAS. C. LEIGH, candidate of the Anti-dram-shop Party for the office of Lieutenant-Governor, who was advertised to speak. Mr. SOLOMON MESSMER, Jr., presided, and Mr. PHILLIP PHILLIPS varied the exercises by singing excellent temperance songs.

On being introduced to the audience Mr. Leigh said he should relate the old story of the evils of intemperance. The dram-shop was the source of poverty and crime; 15,000 of them are established by law in the State of New-York, and in the Metropolitan district they bring forth one murder every twenty-four hours. Again and again the friends of temperance had marshaled their hosts to overthrow this power for evil, and again and again had they been cheated. The Anti-dram-shop Party intended to establish no sumptuary law; they would have no committee to follow one who buys a keg or a bottle of intoxicating liquors, in order to see what is done with it; but simply protests against the cutting up of liquors to retail, in drams, and the offering of them, in this shape, for sale. Absolute prohibitory laws are incapable of being carried out in this country, and are founded on a false basis. The Anti-dram-shop Party interfered with no man's religion; it seeks to obtain the aid and assistance of all religions and sects. It seeks to suppress the dram-shop by law. Some say, "Why not use moral suasion?" It has been used. But it can have effect only on men who have morals to be affected; it will be useless when the attempt is made on immoral men. It is not proposed, or expected, to make temperance by laws all that is asked or expected is, that the dram-shop shall be destroyed. The proposition is simple and possible in law. The business differs from all others in this respect, because the State demands that all who wish to follow it shall have the great seal of the State to license him for this express purpose. Why do you organize a distinct party? say some. Why leave other temperance men out? Why put the rostrum, the Press, the influences of social life, all have been resorted to for the purpose of destroying the evil; party caucuses have been tried in order to put temperance men in nomination; men have gone down into the dirty pool of politics in order to effect this purpose, all to no avail. What, then, can temperance men do? The Democratic Party, heretofore, and boldly avows its adherence to the largest liberty in favor of the sale of intoxicating drinks. The Republican Party has done absolutely nothing for the cause of temperance, although they have been in power for the past ten years. At the last Convention of that Party they passed a resolution declaring that as the legal voters of any town have the right to grant license for the sale of liquors, therefore they should have the right to prohibit it. What do they mean by "they should?" The right to prohibit is now the law of the State, passed at the last session of the Legislature, and by a Democratic Governor, and yet the Republican Party, presuming on the ignorance of the temperance people, put forward such a resolution as this, thinking they will be satisfied, and will go to the polls and vote their ticket. Both the Republican and the Democratic Parties are thanks to their leaders, have made the liquor business a party cause, and yet it has been a party cause in all the past history of good deeds. We have now vital issues to be decided—the destruction of the dram-shop is demanded, and if the Republican Party will aid the temperance people in this, they may depend on their votes; but if they do not, then the friends of temperance will trust to their own efforts. The Anti-dram-shop Party has a distinct issue, while in neither of the platforms of the two great parties is there anything more than allusions to the past. The whole question is now narrowed down to a struggle for office between those that are out and those that are in; and in this great City of ours the leaders of both parties have, for many years, been engaged in dividing the plunder. The Anti-corn League in England, after carrying their point, became a Reform Party, and after making England almost a Republic, they have become an Anti-dram-shop Party. We should follow their example; and now, having established sumptuary laws, we should go further, and seek to overthrow the greatest of all evils—the dram-shop. The existence of the dram-shop is dangerous to our very political institutions. In these places the machinery of politics is put in motion. The dram-sellers are the only men in the country who violate the law with impunity. Were it not for their influence we should not have had men in the Legislature who sold and bought—we should have passed no Erie bill, an enactment which has done more than anything else to ruin American securities abroad. But for the hope of having the aid of the dram-shop influence, a young and talented gentleman who has achieved high office and hopes for still higher, would not have declared his adhesion to the bill. When the dram-seller asks anything, the men in office knowing where the power that nominated them is placed, dare not refuse it. The fact is, the dram-shop must go down or our liberties are gone. The speaker said he had confidence enough in the American people to believe that when this issue comes fairly up, their influence will be on the side of liberty. To the candidates present he said, "How can you succeed?" he would say, the religious masses, the temperance masses, and the tax-payers will be on the side of the anti-dram-shop party. The wives and mothers of the land will use their influence in favor of that party's success, and with these forces on their side, and God on their side, this curse of all curses will be put an end to.

Mr. MERRITT announced that the meetings would be held at Cooper Institute every Sunday evening until further notice, and that on Sunday evening next, Mr. E. K. C. JUDSON (Red Buntline) will make an address. After further singing by Mr. PHILLIPS, the meeting adjourned.

The Campaign Among the Germans.

By the formation of the German Central Campaign Club of this City by the German Republican Central Committee, the campaign among our German fellow-citizens has been fairly opened. The numerous German district campaign organizations which are now in the course of formation in all parts of the City will give strength to the movement among the Germans of all parties in favor of the Saratoga nomination. A large portion of the German voters, who heretofore have cast their votes in favor of the Democratic Party, have evinced a determination to sever their connection with a party principally composed of an element which is in open sympathy with the national and hereditary enemy of Germany. This determination on the part of the majority of the intelligent German voters has been made apparent by the movement among the Germans of the Twenty-second Ward, where, without distinction of party, a strong Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Club has been organized under favorable auspices, and by the proceedings of the German Republican Central Committee on Friday evening. The German Central Campaign Club was formed on a broad basis, with a view to not merely representing the German Republicans, but the great majority of independent German voters, who will no longer affiliate with the Democratic Party.

The new German Central Campaign Club, which, no doubt, will soon be in working order, invites all intelligent German voters to join the organization, to crush "the rotten and corrupt Tammany Hall regency, who, aided by political Tricks, have for many years ruled with an iron hand that great commercial emporium, and who have succeeded by the most palpable frauds at the ballot-box" in keeping their ill-gotten power. A vigorous campaign among our German fellow-citizens may be expected.

Twentieth Assembly District Boys in Blue.

At a meeting of the "Boys in Blue," Twentieth Assembly District, held at DINGLEDEY'S No. 1,039 Third-avenue, on Saturday evening, 17th inst., Capt. WM. H. BENJAMIN in the chair, the following officers were elected:

Capt. JOHN OSBORN, President; First-Lieut. Reuben Parkhurst, Secretary; Capt. William H. Benjamin, Commandant; First-Lieut. Fred. Lowe, First-Lieutenant; First-Lieut. Samuel Smith, Second-Lieutenant; Serg't Patrick Quinn, First-Sergeant; Corp. Thomas Scanlon, Corp. George F. Mackay; Capt. N. H. Babcock, Delegates to Central Committee.

The Political Situation in the Fifth New-Jersey Congressional District.

In the Fifth Congressional District of New-Jersey, which comprises Hudson County and Newark, three candidates for Congress are now in the field. They are GEORGE A. HALSEY, Republican; ORESTES CLEVELAND, regular Democratic, and JEREMIAH TRUMBULL, the candidate of the "Young Democracy." Before the close of the present week there will probably be a fourth aspirant for Congressional honors. In the Convention that nominated Mr. HALSEY, there were several unseated delegates—men who worked hard for the nomination of Mr. FARNUM, the editor of the Jersey City Journal, and only failed of success by a few votes. They are loud in their complaints of unfair play.

A convention has now been called, to meet in Newark on Tuesday evening, for the purpose of protesting formally against the action of the Bergen Convention, and of putting a new candidate in nomination. It was reported yesterday that a delegation of Newark Republicans had offered the nomination to Major FANCHER, but this rumor is pronounced untrue upon the best authority, and there is no likelihood that such a nomination would be accepted.

The district as the last election, in 1868, gave over 9,000 Democratic majority; but since the passage of the Fifteenth Amendment a mass of 1,000 votes has probably been added to the Republican side, where the Democrats have to extend of the larger vote and more than we.

MAINE.

The Congressional Fight—A Sketch of Their Services.

From the Lewiston Journal.

The Republicans of Maine have done honor to themselves and to the State, by returning not only a full Republican delegation to Congress, but also a delegation which for ability and efficiency will not be excelled by any other delegation. The solid vote for Representatives to Congress, also indicates better than the vote for any other candidates, more exactly the position of the State on national questions. Mr. LYNCH has 1,500 majority in the First District; Mr. FRYE about 9,400 majority in the Second District; Mr. BLAINE about 2,000 in the Third District; Mr. PERHAM about 2,000 in the Fourth District, and Mr. HALE about 1,000 in the Fifth District. Aggregate Republican majority on Congressmen, about 16,000. Two years ago, when the Republicans carried everything by storm, the Republican majorities in the several districts were: First District, 3,126; Second District, 4,600; Third District, 3,320; Fourth District, 4,033; Fifth District, 9,034.

The reelection of Hon. JOHN LYNCH, from the First District, by so unexpected a majority, only shows that it needed no much activity among Republicans in other sections to bring up the Republican majority in the State to at least 15,000. Mr. LYNCH has already served six years in Congress with great ability and entire success. He is one of the most successful merchants in Portland.

Hon. WM. P. FRYE, who is returned from the Second District by a crushing majority, is the only new member from this State; but his long legislative experience and familiarity with parliamentary proceedings, his well-known ability and rare powers as a public speaker, will give him at once a commanding position in Congress. He was born in Lewiston, Androscoggin County, graduate of Bowdoin of the Class of 1850, and one of the ablest and most successful lawyers in the State.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE is elected for the fifth time from the Third District, having been first elected to Congress in 1862. His long and successful career in Congress, and the almost unanimous voice with which he was called to the Speakership, indicate the high position which he holds among the Republicans of the nation, and show that the Third District has honored herself and the State, by keeping Mr. BLAINE in Congress.

Hon. JOHN A. PETERS is re-elected from the Fourth District by a large majority, although his majority is diminished somewhat by the fact that the Chamberlain movement in Bangor, by some mysterious process, threw a large part of the soldiers over to the support of MARCELLUS EMERY, a man who openly exposed the Southern Confederacy at the opening of the rebellion. Mr. PETERS is one of the ablest lawyers in the State, and has already made his mark in Congress.

The youngest member of the delegation is Hon. EUGENE HALE, who is reelected from the Fifth District by a reduced but decisive majority. Mr. HALE is a native of Turner, in this county, and, although but thirty-five years of age, has already made his mark in the legal profession and in Congress.

THE VOTE FOR GOVERNOR.

The Portland Press of the 17th inst. says:

We have received returns of the vote cast for Governor in 308 towns, which have thrown 69,378 votes, against 67,079 last year—an increase this year of 2,299 votes.

The vote in these towns this year is: PERHAM, 40,170; ROBERTS, 41,008. Majority for PERHAM, 2,102. Last year CHAMBERLAIN had, in the same towns, 47,254; SMITH, 38,419; HICHBORN, 1,406. Majority for CHAMBERLAIN, 7,429.

The towns to be heard from last year gave CHAMBERLAIN, 2,425; SMITH, 1,009; HICHBORN, 663. They will slightly increase the majority for Mr. PERHAM, but we think it will be well up to 6,000.

THE EX-PRESIDENT.

Andrew Johnson at Gallatin—He Reviews and Defends His Policy in the Past—His Advice to Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 18.—Ex-President ANDREW JOHNSON spoke at Gallatin last night, to a large audience. He briefly reviewed his public career since the commencement of the war, maintained his consistency, and claimed that he had voted uniformly for the good of the whole country. He referred to the principles on which the Federal Government was organized, and declared that they had been subverted since the war. He said he had always been a Democrat; he was elected Vice-President as a Union Democrat, and he had not and would not swerve from the true faith. He condemned the recent State Convention for ignorance. He then read a resolution adopted by the State Convention favoring a restoration of the Southern States to their rights as the sovereign States of the American Union, and said it was the only declaration of principles in discussion, and admonished the people against repeating the errors of the past civil strife. He recommended a close alliance with the national Democracy, and a choice of Governor, members of Congress and the Legislature, free from suspicion of secession. He condemned the State Convention for not disclaiming secession, and suggested the holding of a primary meeting to exhibit the tone of the State of Tennessee on that subject. He closed with an appeal for prudence and discretion, to keep off reconstruction and military rule.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 18.—SOLOMON PHELPS' house and barn at Westfield were destroyed by fire this morning, together with 200 tons of hay and a large amount of corn. Loss $15,000; partially insured.

EVANS, Col., Sept. 18.—WILLIAM HENRY was, today, detected in the act of committing rape upon the person of a little girl six years of age, and the daughter of Judge BURNETT, of this town. While being conveyed to the jail he was forcibly taken from the officers by a crowd of citizens and tarred and feathered and driven out of the town.

Arrest of a Notorious Counterfeiter.

Col. WHITLEY and his officers of the United States Secret Service, yesterday arrested, at the corner of Sixteenth-street and Third-avenue, WM. SHERRY, alias Charles Cooper, a notorious counterfeiter, who had in his possession excellently-executed counterfeit plates for the issue of the new fifteen-cent currency notes. SHERLIY is said to have engraved these plates in the first instance for the notorious BILL GUNNING, but owing to the arrest of that personage they were not delivered, but remained in SHERLIY's hands, and he was endeavoring to dispose of them to some other queerman, when he and they fell into the clutches of the law. SHERLIY has frequently been arrested before in the West, but has always managed to escape; but the evidences of his guilt being on the occasion referred to, and upon his person, it is thought he will have more difficulty in evading the penalties of his crime. In addition to the plates a fine set of engraver's tools was found in his possession.....Gen. COX's residence, Brooklyn, which was burglarized after his arrest. The prisoner was locked up and will be arraigned before a United States commissioner this morning.

THE LATE DROUTH.

Injurious Results in the City and Vicinity—Wells, Springs and Rivers Dried Up—Sufferings of the Farmers—Destruction of Crops—Injury to Manufactories—The Public Health—The Markets, &c.

The distressing heat may be said to have at last ended. The rain-storm which commenced on Friday night effectually killed it, and how thankful all are for the change! However, there are people who now begin to grieve because they have to crow the muddy streets, and because the wind makes the free with man's hats and ladies' dresses. How changed did everything about the streets of our City look yesterday, when one thinks of what it was two weeks ago. Then there was swelterings heat and flying volumes of dust. Saturday a cool, strong wind blew the rain straight in our faces and gave the thoroughfares that pestiferous appearance, with which none are better acquainted in wet weather than New-Yorkers. The storm continued all day, and the rain scarcely ceased for five minutes; it came down in a continuous drizzle, and only assumed strength when the strong gusts of the storm blew it along. Poor pedestrians received the full benefit of the blast, and, although many tried the experiment of an umbrella, they found it a failure, and "let it down." The storm was very severe along West and South streets, where it blew with all the fury of a gale, and in many instances men who were engaged at work on the streets were obliged to desist. Almost all the employes of the Park Commissioners were obliged to suspend work, and many a poor man thus lost a day's pay, who could badly afford it.

While the inhabitants of the City were blaming fault with the storm, the farmers in our immediate vicinity were loud in their expressions of delight at the advent of the rain. The storm gave them no trouble, but, as the contrary, brought much consolation, and was indeed, much needed. This storm would appear not to be local, for vessels arrived at the port Saturday and yesterday experienced strong head winds the greater part of the passage from Europe. The steam-ship Erin, from Liverpool, encountered a violent gale on the 11th inst., and the Cleopatra, from Savannah, Ga., reports "heavy north-east gales and very heavy sea to Hatteras, since which time have had strong northerly winds."

The storm must, however, be regarded as a blessing, for the long-continued drouth was in various ways a thing most serious. Injury to the country and health of consumers would have been attended with the most disastrous results. Not alone did the farmers feel its effects, but the inhabitants of large cities were becoming apprehensive of danger. When wells and springs and brooks dry up, it is time to consider the matter seriously. Cities reservoirs that supply large populations with water, from fall, in time, it is but wise to take precautions, and when new insects appear to destroy the crops, it is time to become alarmed. We have just passed through such dangers, although many, who never gave it a thought, will think the assertion incredible; but it is not so. It is the fact, and can be proven to be such. Throughout all that portion of the country within a circle of thirty miles of New-York, the drouth was severely felt.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

suffered very much. The first season of drouth this year may be said to have ended in the beginning of August, but the rains which closed it did not affect the springs; they only touched the surface. Then came the second dry season, which ended last Friday, and which the oldest farmers in Westchester County declare to have been the longest and severest on record. Many Wells, springs and streams all fell lower than ever known before, and some dried up completely. This caused immense hardship to farmers, who were obliged either to drive their cattle for miles to find water or else haul water a like distance to the cattle. Immense trouble and expense was of course the result, and in some cases the cattle suffered so severely as to reduce their value twenty-five and thirty per cent.

Near as Westchester is to us, but few know of the trouble and loss entailed on the farming portion of its population. Why, it was a common sight during the season to see the farmers and their laborers filling barrels, by means of small buckets thrown over bridges into the brooks and streams that flowed beneath, and this sometimes at a distance of four or five miles from their farms.

Through the town of Westchester there flowed a brook of some size, which had run dry, but steadily and quietly, like old Time himself, for over thirty years. This last drouth, however, did what thirty years failed to do, and the little stream ceased to run, for its waters had disappeared. There was one peculiar effect of the Summer or first drouth noticeable in Westchester and in other places, we believe—that is, that it arrested the growth of potatoes, and where the rain set in they commenced to grow again. Many produced a second crop of small tubers, and in other cases the potatoes themselves sprouted.

The drouth did immense damage to the corn crop. The cases are numerous where it has been materially injured, and there have been instances where the crop has been entirely burned up. Therefore, in view of such a terrible drouth as that we have just now passed through, the farmers had to postpone getting in their Winter grain until rain would begin to fall, for they were not willing to sow, fearing the seed might sprout and be burned up. The present week, however, has come in most opportune time. Throughout the country, farmers' preparations were being made to take advantage of the opportunity offered of getting in all the wheat and rye of land that was in good condition.

The farmers of the district have indeed suffered much and been sorely harassed by the drouth. Outside living in the thickly populated and paved streets know nothing of the hardships to which the farmer has been subjected; but it is to be hoped most fervently that their patience will never be put to such a test again. Before leaving Westchester, a very important matter cannot be omitted. Since the drouth commenced a new species of cabbage worm has made its appearance, and has been doing great injury to the cabbage; in fact, it is asserted by some of the farmers that it has destroyed the entire crop. Its appearance they attribute to the drouth.

STATEN ISLAND.

In Staten Island, both farmers and people living in the towns have suffered considerably. Staten Island, unlike New-York or Brooklyn, has no reservoir to set a supply of water from; her sole dependence rests on the wells and springs, which are plenty from one end to the other, and furnish excellent water. Within the past four weeks a great number of the wells ran dry. In the vicinity of New-Brighton, some that usually had eighteen feet of water have now dwindled down to two and three feet. It has been always a custom on the island that where a spring was in a particular place, a house was then attached to a residence—to allow the people of the neighborhood who were less fortunate to draw from the well. As long as the spring supplied it liberally, the more drawn from it, the better was the water, and the one giving permission to his neighbor was thus benefited instead of being injured. Many, however, now have been reluctantly obliged to withdraw the permission or put a limit to the amount of water drawn, which it need not be told here, caused considerable hardship, especially among the poorer classes. Beyond the scarcity of water in the island, the farmers of Staten Island were not otherwise troubled with the drouth. Island, however, it was felt most keenly, for here as well as in Westchester County, the cabbage worm was at his work, and injured every leaf above ground in the whole county. The corn suffered considerably, and the few cattle on the island know what it was to be without water. In the vicinity of Richmond, New-Dorp and other places along the line of the railroad, the effects of the drouth are plainly visible. In many places the corn is burned, and the tops of the grass present a very unhealthy appearance. Touch the grass with one's foot and the earth beneath flies up in dust as fine as powder.

The roads are in a frightful condition with the dust, and none of them so bad as those that lead from Stapleton to Richmond, the county town. To drive along them is like driving through mud—and worse. There could not have been less than six inches of dust on them last Friday, and those who believed it could not have escaped the penalty by driving clouds upon clouds of the finest powder blown into their eyes, nose and mouth. Saturday's rain, however, settled the matter, but not until late in the day. In the forenoon, nevertheless, the showers of the night before, the wind blew with such violence as to raise the dust in volumes. The drouth has left its marks behind, and the rain now stops in as a most welcome visitor.

LONG ISLAND.

From the middle of April until the 7th of August there was no rain on the east end of the island, and but little in the central and western portions. Since the 7th of August is no part of the island has any rain fallen. The consequence has been short crops of almost everything raised by the farmers. The hay crop being harvested first, suffered least. Although it has suffered with the rest of the crops in quantity, in quality it is considered above the average. The wheat crop is also above the average, and in some parts of the island better than for many years. The kernels are full and plump, injured by no rust, blight or weevil. The quantity, on account of the dry weather, the best judges say, will not be more than two-thirds of the average yield. Crops which have ripened in the second drouth have suffered the most. Corn, in some parts of the island, has been entirely destroyed. Through the Eastern towns the stalks of hundreds of fields do not reach to a man's shoulder, and in fully possessed the appearance of having been scorched by a fire. In low, wet districts of Southold, the sole dwellers have rotted and rocks of all descriptions have suffered, but not as much as corn. Potatoes are very small in size. Outbuildings have suffered both from the dry weather and a worm. Fruit has been a failure, especially pears.

The farmers of the island have suffered in another manner. The immense tracts of pine woods in the central and eastern part of the island have been dried almost to tinder by the hot weather, consequently a large number of fires have raged in the woods, and among them two which have equaled any one of them, excepting any in the number of acres burnt over. The fire near Deer Park destroyed 10,000 acres of timber, and the one near the Blue Harbor Branch Railroad over burning from 20,000 to 30,000 acres. In the former fire a number of thousand cords of wood was destroyed, and in the latter a large amount, although not so much. The amount of property destroyed is hardly possible to be estimated. The smallest figures at which it has been estimated being $100,000, and the larger are nearly double.

The city of no water has not been confined to the farmers. The manufacturers of the island, especially the paper manufacturers, have been compelled to stop work. The Brookville has forgone the use of soft-water, and even well-water in localities has failed. Springs and rivulets have been dried up; ponds, which before were constant never-failing, have succumbed, and all nature has seemed dusty and dirty. The fields on the island have been almost impassable, and the shade-trees lining the roads and turnpikes looking as though they were covered with a coating of frost. Ronkonkoma Lake, which in the early Spring seems to an alarming height, has not only subsided, but there were outcroppings of sand where water was growing, and yesterday, before the rain, its level was but three feet lower than the lowest tide; springs and creeks, which have arisen in the tides of upland running through the centre of the island have, as a general thing, not failed, as if a never-failing supply was locked up in the bosom of the hills.

NEW-JERSEY.

It has been many years since New-Jersey has suffered from the drouth as it has for the past few months, and the present one, as a result of the noted Deerville Camp-meeting, as well as among people who believe in divine interposition, have been offered up for the rain which has now been sent upon us. The crops have suffered very materially in many counties, though the hay crop, which was secured before the present dry spell had become severe. The wheat crop, however, is complained of as being very light, and much of it shriveled and imperfect, on account of the absence of the rain so much needed to fill and ripen the berry. The potato crop this season will be full twenty per cent less than an average on account of the drouth.

The only crop which seems to be entirely uninjured by the absence of rain is the fruit. While peaches in other States are reported to be forty to fifty per cent below the usual yield, in New-Jersey the crop is full and remarkably fine. The display of fruit at the State Fair, to be held this week at Waverley, will be unusually fine and fruit-growers will be present in great numbers and will exhibit their finest specimens. With the exception, the report of the crops throughout the State are reported to be about twenty per cent. below the average yield.

In Sussex, Cape May and Atlantic Counties the corn crop is pronounced good, according to the most reliable reports, at from twenty to forty per cent. below the average. In other counties, however, the crop is fully as large as in former years. Rye is deficient in Hunterdon, Mercer, Sussex, Warren, Essex, Salem and Gloucester Counties.

Travel by private conveyance and by rail has been extremely uncomfortable for months, and pleasure-seekers have avoided the public roads as much as possible. Sickness has prevailed quite extensively in Eastern New-Jersey within two months, and the physicians account for it principally, because of the hot, dry days and cool nights. In the City and at the residences of those who enjoy the luxuries of beautiful grounds in the country, a special demand has been employed to water the grounds, and they generally present a very striking contrast to the dry and parched earth adjoining these more favored localities.

Every where has the dust been smothering to the animal traveler and pedestrian, and troublesome to the fastidious housekeeper, through whose open window it has poured in clouds. But now the spell is broken, and very many will say Amen to the petition of the plain old farmer who asked the Lord to send a rain that would "drizzle, drizzle for a week or so."

The most serious effect of the drouth in New-Jersey—so far as its large manufacturing interests are concerned—was the scarcity of water to drive the mills that depend upon water for their motive power. In some parts of the State the want of water was severely felt, and some of the largest manufacturing establishments in the State were compelled to close in consequence. At Boonton, in the northern part of the State, and west of Paterson, the largest nail factory in the country has been for years past in successful operation. During the dry season just passed they have had their first forced intermission. The scarcity of water compelled them to cease their operations, and the cotton-mills at Paterson have also been shut up temporarily, until the fall of water shall have become sufficient to enable them to resume work. Over 1,000 men employed in these mills have been for the time thrown out of work. The water that has fallen will do little more than to moisten the ground in that parched locality, and many other heavy water-falls must come to fully supply their sources of power.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Having paid attention to the green fields and their products, it is now well to take a glance at the Metropolis, and see how the Empire City fared through the dry season. As regards one very important matter—the supply of water—New-York was most fortunate, and her citizens never experienced throughout the whole term any want of water, though early in the Summer it was deemed necessary to caution the people against waste. Last year, for the space of two months, there was no regular supply of water in the reservoir. This year, however, when the new Board organized, Mr. TWEED sent the Engineer to Putnam County, and two lakes were bought. These have helped, since then, to give the City a constant supply of water.

Certain portions of the City were, however, affected by the drouth, as, for instance, at Carmansville, where the people were obliged to use fire engines to pump water into their cisterns. In this manner they avoided the effects of the dry term, and supplied themselves. In the lower portions, in Greenwich, Washington and other streets near the Battery, the want of water was much felt, and the sanitary condition of these localities became exceedingly bad. The sewers, which run within a foot or two of some of the Greenwich-street lodging basements, sent forth a most offensive odor into these overwhelmed sink-holes. There is not one of these places where the constant rumbling noise of the water, rising as the tide comes in, cannot be heard beneath the boards. During the drouth this undercurrent dried up, and the stench arising from the filth was disgusting in the extreme. The wonder to all acquainted with the matter is, that from these wretched holes a pestilence did not originate and spread over the entire City. Yet, curious to relate, the average of deaths in the localities referred to was but a very small proportion more than that of previous years.

Many of our new buildings were affected by the drouth—especially those constructed with brick, and in some instances walls which had been but just put up were obliged to be taken down as unreliable and unsafe. Although the ground showed signs of the drouth and heat, neither affected in any manner the pipes that convey water through the City. All throughout there was a plentiful supply, so much so, indeed, that on Friday, before the rain commenced, the water in the reservoir was but seven inches below the waste. Engineers from the Department have been looking after the supply for some time past. Yesterday they sent the following telegram to Mr. TWEED:

LAKE MAHOPAC, Sept. 17.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Review for the Week Ending Saturday, Sept. 10—The Present Week.

There appeared to have been more brickbats in the real estate market during the past week than was apparent during the week ending Saturday, Sept. 10, so far, at least, as the Exchange gave any token as to the state of the business; but on reviewing the figures for the week, it turns out to be otherwise. Against sixty-one transfers, amounting in all to $1,300,082 for New-York, and 126 transfers, in money value $630,789, for Brooklyn, for that week, we have, as the transactions of the week ending on Saturday last, fifty-eight transfers for New-York and 113 for Brooklyn, in money values of $1,128,249 and $385,386, respectively, giving us a difference between the transactions of the two weeks, and in favor of those of week before last of $245,704 for New-York and $237,609 for Brooklyn. The public sales at the Exchange were greater last week, however, than they were during the week previous, both as to number and property-values. The week ending Sept. 10 gave us only three sales, all made in one day, (by Messrs. ROBERTS & McGUIRE,) amounting in value to $54,715; whereas, the week just closed gave us nine sales—three by Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER & SON, amounting to $69,450; one by MULLER, WILKINS & CO., amounting to $12,000; four by Messrs. FAIRCHILD, STEVENSON & CO., amounting to $56,175; and one by Messrs. ROBERTS & McGUIRE, amounting to $11,000—in all, $139,625, or, in money value, $84,910 more than the sales of the week before last. This exhibit of the transactions at the Exchange does not show much improvement in the actual business, as most of it is done on private terms, and the transfer values have decreased; and if we even add the gross amount of these transfer values to those obtained at public sale, we still fall behind the week ending Sept. 10 in the sum of $260,822. Well-versed dealers declare, however, that this month is generally a backward one. Heavy speculators have only just returned from the country and are casting about for bargains—are, in fact, studying the chances for future operations; and, doubtless, when October is fairly set in, the market reports of the Times will tell a very different and far more interesting story than that we are now compelled to lay before our readers.

The following is a summary of the transfers for the past week, day by day, both in this City and Brooklyn:

	Transfers.	New-York.	Transfers.	Brooklyn.
Monday	13	$149,783	21	$101,300
Tuesday	6	58,400	18	58,625
Wednesday	9	224,450	19	41,575
Thursday	6	122,437	19	67,150
Friday	12	240,160	24	89,120
Saturday	11	188,760	14	26,041
Total	58	$1,128,249	113	$385,386

During the coming week there are valuable offerings to be made, which will doubtless induce a more than ordinary attendance of bidders.

Messrs. ROBERTS & McGUIRE have bulletined improved property on Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, 225 feet from Fifth-avenue to be sold on Tuesday, Sept. 20, by virtue of a judgment order of the Supreme Court, in a partition suit, GRATZ NATHAN, Esq., referee.

WILLIAM KEMBELLY will, on Wednesday, Sept. 21, sell twelve valuable lots at Wilton, on the north side of One Hundred and Thirty-sixth-street, and south side of One Hundred and Thirty-seventh-street, between Boulevard and St. Ann's avenues. Each lot is 25 feet front and rear, and 105 feet deep. The location is a desirable one, adjoining the residence of H. Eadmond, Esq., and about one mile from Harlem Bridge. Both Boulevard and St. Ann's avenues are to be 200 feet wide.

ROBERTS & McGUIRE will sell, by order of JOSEPH H. DUKE, Esq., referee, on Thursday, Sept. 22, an irregular plot of land on Third-avenue, between Eighty-ninth and Eighty-ninth streets, 26.5 feet from the corner of Eighty-eighth-street and Third-avenue, fronting on Third-avenue 100 feet, running parallel with Eighty-ninth-street 94.7 feet and with Eighty-eighth-street 100 feet, being 114 feet deep at its outermost point from Third-avenue.

It is expected that there will be spirited bidding on all this property, and especially on that in Seventeenth and Eighteenth-streets.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.
In order to afford cheap communication between the cities of
NEW-YORK, ALBANY, TROY, THE WEST AND NORTH,
The proprietors of the ALBANY AND TROY LINE, comprising the large, fast and commodious steamers
VANDERBILT AND CONNECTICUT, have decided to make a permanent reduction in the fares, and to classify the rates that no extra charges can be made for state-rooms and berths.
THE ABOVE STEAMERS ARE ELEGANT ON TROY.
Including state-room.....$2 00
Including state-room accommodations.....1 50
Including state-room or berth.....1 00
Deck passage, without state-room accommodations.....50
HUDSON RIVER ROAD.
Including state-room.....$4 00
Fare and state-room berth.....3 50
Fare and berth.....2 50
Deck.....1 50
HUDSON RIVER ROAD.
Fare and sleeping accommodations.....$4 50
Fare and state-room.....4 00
Fare and berth without accommodations.....3 50
It will be seen that travelers patronizing our line, instead of the People's Albany line, save in each the following amounts:
ON RIVER BETWEEN STATE-ROOM.....$2 00
ON BERTH IN ROOM.....1 75
ON BERTH IN CABIN.....1 50
ON DECK PASSAGE.....0 50
SAVE IN CASH BY TAKING OUR LINE INSTEAD OF HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.
Fare in sleeping-car, compared with our whole room.....$2 75
Difference with one berth in room.....1 75
Difference with one berth in cabin.....1 50
It is this sum that every traveler is directly interested in supporting and encouraging as in affording with first-class steamers, cheap communication. These steamers are not to be towed, and are of 2,000 tons burden; have very powerful engines and ENTIRELY NEW BOILERS, and considered the fastest night boats on the Hudson. No expense has been spared in furnishing and decorating the state-rooms and cabins; over $150,000 has been expended for this purpose during the past year.
THEY LEAVE NEW-YORK FROM THEIR NEW PIER, NO. 41 NORTH RIVER,
Between Spring and Charlton-sts., three blocks above Desbrosses-st. Ferry,
DAILY, SATURDAYS EXCEPTED,
at 6 o'clock P. M.
Returning, leave Troy at 6, and Albany at 6 o'clock P. M., or on the arrival of the evening express train of cars from the North and West, arriving in New-York about 5½ o'clock A. M. Tickets are sold and baggage checked to all points West and North. Passengers on this line of Susquehanna, New-York Central, and Northern Railroads will avail themselves of this route by purchasing their tickets for Albany, where our baggage-wagons will convey baggage free to the cars.
FARES ON SUNDAYS SAME AS HERETOFORE.

THE WAR.

Paris will appear in this city after today. M. CREMIEUX, the Minister of Justice, is lodged here at the residence of the Archbishop. There is a perfect understanding between them, which is considered as foreshadowing the union of all political parties for the national defense.

Advices received at the War Department show that great numbers of the French are emigrating.

STRASBOURG.

Progress of the Siege—Early Capitulation Probable—Cost of the Siege.

MINDELHEIM, Sept. 18.—It is officially reported that the works facing lunettes Nos. 52 and 53 of Strasbourg are finished. Near lunette No. 53 mines were exploded by the besieged, and the earthworks protecting the assailants were injured, but they have since been repaired. Colmar and Mulhausen are certainly occupied by the Baden contingents, under Gen. HELLER.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The commander of Strasbourg, Gen. ULRICH, telegraphs to the War Department that the situation of the city is continually growing desperate, necessitating his early capitulation.

COLOGNE, Sept. 17.—The Gazette, of this city, today has an editorial article giving the following interesting statistics and particulars: There are now before Strasbourg eighteen batteries of mortars and rifled cannon. These fire collectively more than 2,000 shots into the city every day. Thirty carloads of munitions of war, including 8,000 quintals of iron, are thus consumed daily.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Only 30,000 Instead of 100,000 Prisoners Taken at Sedan—Retirement of the French Ambassador from Madrid.

BERLIN, Sept. 18.—A telegram from the King's head-quarters makes a great reduction in the number of prisoners secured by the capitulation of Sedan. It states that the total number of men actually captured was only 30,000, including 39 Generals and 2,595 officers, 500 of whom were released on parole. The killed and wounded numbered 20,000.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The Press of Paris, without exception, is opposed to the restoration of the BONAPARTES.

The French Institute, in the name of civilization, protests against the possible destruction, by bombardment, of the libraries, observatories, museums and galleries of Paris.

Baron MERCIER, the French Ambassador at Madrid, had an audience with the Regent, at which he announced his recall, and took formal leave.

The French mail, just received via Dover, contains nothing of a later date than Friday. Paris was then belligerent in feeling, although a conference between BISMARCK and FAVRE was anticipated. Fort Vincennes had been evacuated, and its guns had been brought within the walls.

Bavaria has repudiated any desire to enter the North German Confederation.

WARNING FROM BISMARCK TO A RHEIMS JOURNAL.

BISMARCK has sent a warning to the Independence, a journal of Rheims, to the effect that it must change its tone or it will be suppressed. The Paris Press protest with indignation against the act as an interference with the internal affairs of France, as well as a violation of the freedom of the Press.

French and Irish Meeting in St. Louis—Aid for the French.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18.—The French and Irish citizens held a very large meeting today at Concordia Park, to raise funds and express their sympathy with the French people in their struggle for liberty. A procession a mile in length, composed of various civil societies and citizens generally, marched through the city, making a fine display. The park was densely crowded, there being no less than 10,000 people present. Speeches were made by prominent Irishmen and Frenchmen. Resolutions were unanimously adopted expressing a deep sympathy with the French people in their effort to throw off the yoke of despotism and establish a republic. A large sum of money was raised for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the deceased French.

RELIGIOUS.

CHURCH REOPENINGS.

Laborers for God—Opening Services in the Lexington-Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

Services were held in the Lexington-avenue Church yesterday for the first time since the Summer vacation. Rev. ROBERT STRATTON preached a sermon on the occasion from the words: "We are laborers together for God." After referring to the duty of Christians to labor for God, he said it was incumbent upon them to use all the appliances which the march of science has placed within our reach, to build up and advance the Kingdom of Christ. Each Christian was a laborer for his own salvation. "Work out your salvation" is the command of the Bible. God appeals to man's self-interest in thus commanding him to work out his own salvation. He places it within man's reach to carve out his own spiritual destiny, God leaving it to him to become what he chooses to make himself, by using the moral influences placed within his reach. While man is under obligations to work out his own salvation, he is not to confine himself to his individual salvation alone. Charity, it is said, begins at home, but it must not remain there. It must go out from self, and seek the salvation of others. God has carved this stone out of the mountain, but it is for us to come and stand behind and around it, and then roll it down the hill of time. We are also laborers together. Notwithstanding differences in creed and church government, the Christian denominations are grand corps of the army of Christ, which as a grand unit is laboring for his glory and the extending of his kingdom. But not only do we labor for God, but we labor with God. Shall the Christian have his breast to life's storms alone, and have none to dry the weeping eye, or stay the tottering steps? No. We labor with God. He accompanies the Christian in his labors, and by his grace, and the ordinances of his Church, soothes the sorrowing breast. He wipes the weeping eye, and stays by his faithful promises the believer's tottering steps. How consoling, then, is it that in our labors, whether in the ministry or as individual Christians, we are not called upon to tread the wine-press alone, but that God labors with us, and by us, and through us. Let us, then, he said in conclusion, be faithful and steadfast as laborers for God, consoled by the consciousness of His presence with us, and that He will at the last great day reward every one according to their deeds, whether they be good or whether they be evil.

The Jane-Street M. E. Church.

The Jane-street M. E. Church was reopened yesterday. The church and parsonage, which are situated between Greenwich-street and Eighth-avenue, have just been painted, making them appear as new. The class-rooms and lobbies have been cleaned, painted and varnished, and the walls calcimined. The Sunday-school and lecture-room have been greatly enlarged, painted, and the walls calcimined. The room, full fifty feet square, has been newly furnished with seats of the most modern and improved style. The altar has also been enlarged and refurnished. There were special services in the church Friday evening. The Sunday-school was opened at 9 A. M., yesterday.

The French Church of St. Esprit—Services in French and Spanish.

The Protestant Episcopal French Church du St. Esprit reopened yesterday after the recess of the Summer, and Rev. Mr. VERMEE, the pastor, preached a sermon founded on the forty-second Psalm and fourth verse, "What does thy God?" He regretted his inability to comment upon the painful state of affairs in Europe, as he did not consider the pulpit a fitting place for the subject. He drew the attention of the small congregation to the remarkable beauty of many passages of the Psalms, which he recited, and urged upon them the worship of God and obedience to His precepts, which the Psalms inculcated. He quoted David and Absalom as admirable examples of paternal and filial affection. He urged steadfastness in duty toward God, and enlarged upon the fortitude of the French Huguenots as examples. Notwithstanding the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and matters occasion on the part of their Catholic antagonists, they firmly adhered to their creed, and suffered banishment rather than recant. The short discourse ended with a prayer that God would give his children strength to obey His commands.

At the close of the French service an Episcopal service in Spanish was proceeded with, as customary, under the pastorship of Rev. Mr. FALMO, who subsequently preached a sermon. The church each morning accommodates a French and Cuban congregation, in turn.

HUNGARY AND AUSTRIA.

Their Religious History Sketched by a Hungarian Divine—Discourse of Rev. Dr. Koenig.

REV. DR. KOENIG, of Pesth, Hungary, delivered a discourse in the Madison-square Church, Rev. Dr. ADAMS', yesterday afternoon, on "The Religious History of Hungary and Austria."

The reverend Doctor was introduced by Dr. ADAMS, who stated that he had been engaged in the Protestant missionary field in Austria and Hungary for many years, and left his field of labor to attend the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, which was to have been held in New-York this year, but which was postponed to next year, in consequence of the breaking out of the war on the Continent of Europe. Dr. KOENIG did not hear of the postponement until he arrived in England, and then decided to pursue his journey, and present the claims of the Protestant people of his native country to the people of the United States.

Dr. KOENIG, thus introduced, commenced his discourse by stating that he had been asked to give a brief account of the religious condition of Southern Europe. He said that he could not confine upon this matter without touching somewhat on the political element which is interwoven with the religious. The Lord Jesus when He was on earth spoke to His disciples of wars and commotions, and said that when these things come to pass they were to look up, for "the hour of your redemption draws nigh." The war which had been waged in Europe might be considered God's work, but apart from the purposes of God we should look for the cause of these commotions. The speaker then stated his conviction that the great power of the necessary by which God intended to build up His Church among the nations of Europe. The speaker then proceeded to describe the field over which he had labored for so many years, as comprising the whole of Austria and Hungary, extending from the Baltic to the Black Sea, and, for a considerable time, he had taught at Constantinople. The Austrian Empire consisted of many countries, each of which had a religious history peculiar to itself, and many of which were the scenes of that great religious awakening which swept over the land in the sixteenth century. There was also a history of this reformation in Italy and Spain, which was as important as that in Austria and Hungary. All through the seventeenth century the work of LUTHER made itself felt in Hungary especially, where his writings were read with avidity. At the beginning of the seventeenth century Hungary had made rapid advances toward Protestantism, and MAXIMILIAN II., from 1564 to 1576, had a strong leaning to the side of Protestantism. The scene subsequently changed to a darker page, and the enemies of the Protestants, in the seventeenth century, commenced their persecutions, which were carried on with vigor. At Prague the Protestant ministers were summoned by the authorities, and banished from the country. In Hungary, also, was this the case. In 1609 the Protestant Church in Austria had ceased to exist. Here and there, however, were small companies who adhered to their faith, and, even while attending mass under compulsion, arranged to meet subsequently and read their Bibles, and worship according to Protestant forms.

The peace of Westphalia, after the Thirty Years' war, gave the Protestants equal rights with the Catholics, and this continued until JOSEPH of Austria restored the full rights to the Protestant community. As soon as the first rays of toleration broke over the land, the little Protestant church which had existed in secret, showed their heads. JOSEPH II. encouraged immigration to Germany, and in this way Protestants from other countries, speaking the German language, came in, settled among the native population and added to their strength. The population of Austria, a few years later, consisted of about nineteen millions, only 340,000 of whom were Protestants, and these were distributed over 321 congregations, which were very small in many cases and poor. The income of the ministers was inadequate to their support, in no instance exceeding four hundred dollars, and many not obtaining more than one hundred dollars, and even fifty dollars per year. The salary of the teachers was still lower. Under these circumstances the enemy attempted to sow dissensions, and succeeded.

Austria possesses only one college for the education of Protestant ministers, and in Bohemia there is but one for the instruction of teachers. There is a great lack of a free religious Press by which to disseminate the doctrines of the Protestant religion, and a serious injury. In Vienna there are but two religious papers, and in Hungary, one in Pesth and another in a distant portion of the country. In Bohemia there are five. Even so late as 1843, if a man preached in his own house in Vienna he was compelled to pay a fine, and was prohibited from offending in that manner again. The power of Rome was broken in those countries after 1848 by the decree in relation to mixed marriages, permitting them to be performed by the civil authority when the priests of the Church of Rome refused to solemnize them; the educational system was also improved.

As to the progress of religious liberty in Hungary, the speaker said that it would be impossible to give an adequate idea of it within the time to which he was limited. The victory which Hungary has achieved in her political reconstruction is due to the power of her Protestant Church, and the Catholics are decidedly more tolerant in that country than in any other, and instances are known where Roman Catholic children are educated in Protestant schools, and even Catholic clergymen connected with Protestant singing, with those of the Protestant denomination.

In conclusion the speaker said that Hungary is entitled to great credit for the stand she has taken in favor of the Protestant religion, and is deserving of assistance. He hoped to be able to awaken the religious people of this country to these facts, and to induce them to contribute liberally to the cause.

"The Issue With Superstition"—Discourse by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.

Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM delivered a discourse yesterday morning to the congregation that assembles in Lyric Hall, Sixth-avenue, upon the text found in the twenty-second and twenty-third verses of the seventeenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, being the words of Paul to the Athenians: "Ye men of Athens! I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious," &c., &c.

Correctly rendered, said the speaker, this passage should have read: "I perceive that in all things ye are too religious." Paul designed to praise the Athenians, not to blame them. But the translators of the Bible could not find it in their hearts to say that the Pagan Greeks were religious. They believed none had the true religion but themselves. They therefore gave Paul's phrase to the Greek language and translate the word "superstitious," that really meant religious or pious. Superstition was regarded as a terrible thing all over the world, and all people were ready to suppose their neighbors were superstitious, but not themselves. Superstition was like the plague and famine, and, these were distributed over 321 congregations, which were very small in many cases and poor. The income of the ministers was inadequate to their support, in no instance exceeding four hundred dollars, and many not obtaining more than one hundred dollars, and even fifty dollars per year. The salary of the teachers was still lower. Under these circumstances the enemy attempted to sow dissensions, and succeeded.

Austria possesses only one college for the education of Protestant ministers, and in Bohemia there is but one for the instruction of teachers. There is a great lack of a free religious Press by which to disseminate the doctrines of the Protestant religion, and a serious injury. In Vienna there are but two religious papers, and in Hungary, one in Pesth and another in a distant portion of the country. In Bohemia there are five. Even so late as 1843, if a man preached in his own house in Vienna he was compelled to pay a fine, and was prohibited from offending in that manner again. The power of Rome was broken in those countries after 1848 by the decree in relation to mixed marriages, permitting them to be performed by the civil authority when the priests of the Church of Rome refused to solemnize them; the educational system was also improved.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

JOHN HARDY and a number of others were yesterday arraigned before Justice DOWLING at the Tombs, charged with having on Saturday night attacked and robbed JOHN BRIDGEWOOD on the Battery. It appears that the deponent, with these men, employes on the Morris and Essex Railroad, came "on a lark" to this City. At night the others took $12 from him. They were committed.

On Thursday last, while some special officers of the Treasury were on the lookout near Sandy Hook, they approached the brig H. O. Berry, and when near her side perceived a very foul odor, which at first was supposed to come from the floating matter in the water. On boarding the vessel the smell became worse, and then the officers resolved on making search. They found the hatches opened fore and aft, and on entering the lower hold discovered the dead body of the late Captain of the brig stowed away among the cargo, which constituted the vessel's cargo. There was plenty of room to stow the box containing the remains above deck. It was ascertained that the Captain had died of cholera, and one of the crew died of yellow fever. His effects, and another sailor removed from the infect disease, was also left in the hospital at that port. The body of the master was in a decomposed state. Affidavits relative to the affair have been sent to the authorities, but what action will be taken in relation to the cargo has not as yet been determined on. The remains of the Captain will be interred this morning at the Quarantine burying-ground, near Prince's Bay.

The steam-ship Crescent City, arrived at this port last evening from New-Orleans, and, near Cape Hatteras, the British bark Isaac, in a disabled condition. The Captain of the bark signaled for assistance, and soon after he and his crew of ten men, and one passenger, were taken on board the Crescent City, and the bark was attached to the steamer to be towed to some safe harbor. Early yesterday morning, when the gale was blowing very severely, the hawsers connecting the two vessels broke, and this occasioned them. The Isaac was then sinking, and as the commander of the Crescent City saw he could be of no more assistance, he proceeded on his way, leaving the bark struggling with the storm and the waves, which by this time have beyond all doubt engulfed her. The Isaac was from Maracaibo, and had on board a valuable cargo. The Captain and crew were brought to this port in the Crescent City.

The Central Park meteorological report for last week sets forth the following facts and figures: Barometer—Mean, 30.210 inches; maximum at 6 A. M., Sept. 12, 30.524 inches; minimum at 12 M., Sept. 15, 29.896 inches; range, .628 inch. Thermometer—Mean, 68° 7°; maximum at 4 P. M., Sept. 14, 89° 5°; minimum at 4 A. M., Sept. 12, 49° 5°; range, 39° 5°. Sept. 17—Rain from 1 A. M. to 12 P. M.; amount of water, .69 inch—total amount of water for week, 1.132 inches.

It is stated on good authority that Mr. ASHBURY has sold the Cambria to a wealthy English gentleman, and on his return to England will at once turn her over to her new owner. Mr. ASHBURY intends taking a trip to Cuba and back, and then after a short stay here will return to England. It is his intention to have a new yacht built which will combine all the excellencies of the American and English styles without having the faults of either.

The following were the indications of the thermometer in the shade yesterday, at the hours mentioned, at Wm. P. ETHERS'S Mineral Water Depot, No. 589 Broadway: 6 A. M., 65°; 8 A. M., 68°; 10 A. M., 72½°; noon, 77°; 2 P. M., 79½°; 4 P. M., 79°; 6 P. M., 74°; 8 P. M., 72°; 10 P. M., 69°; 12 P. M., 66½°.

There are but two cases of yellow fever in the port; these are the stewardess and boy of the Bienville. They are both in hospital at Lower Quarantine, and were yesterday reported as convalescing. No other case is known to the Quarantine doctors, who are keeping a sharp look-out.

GEORGE MYERS, thirteen years of age, of No. 179 Mulberry-street, while playing on a raft in the North River, near Pier No. 54, about 8 o'clock last evening, fell overboard and was drowned. The body was recovered and taken to the Fifth Precinct Station-house for inquest.

JACOB WEINNICH, of No. 205 West Twenty-ninth-street, yesterday, firing a pistol in Thirty-ninth-street, near Eighth-avenue, the powder with which it was loaded seriously injured MARY SCHNEIDER, eight years of age, of No. 303 West Thirty-ninth-street. He was arrested and locked up in the Twentieth Precinct Station-house.

GEORGE DOLL, aged twelve years, of No. 444 East Fourteenth-street, yesterday, fell off and under a Belt Line street-car, in Fourteenth-street, near Avenue C, and was run over and instantly killed. The body was removed to the late residence of the deceased, and the driver of the car was arrested and locked up in the Eighteenth Precinct Station-house, to await the result of the inquest.

CHRISTIAN ELSE, of One Hundred and Eighth-street, fell under a horse car on One Hundred and Eighth-street and Third-avenue, yesterday, and had his right foot crushed. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

A kerosene lamp upset on a stove, yesterday, on the fourth floor of No. 92 Oliver-street, setting fire to the clothes of Mrs. MARGARET SULLIVAN, who was so severely burned that she was removed to the Park Hospital. The damage to the building and furniture was about $600.

Coroner KEENAN, yesterday, was notified that the dead body of JOHN MCCAULEY, aged sixty-four years, was found at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, lying face downward, under the stoop of premises No. 327 West Forty-first-street, with a bruise on the forehead. It is believed that death was caused by falling on his head.

The Coroner was notified of the death of MARY MCGRAY, a decrepit woman, thirty-one years of age, of No. 127 West Thirty-third-street, yesterday. It is thought she died from the effects of intemperance.

GEORGE DONNELLY, aged twelve years, of No. 668 Third-avenue, yesterday fell from a tree in Jones' Wood, breaking his arm. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

Justice DOWLING, yesterday, committed to the Tombs JAMES MCCALL, charged with having assaulted THOMAS MCCONNELL, of No. 117 Mott-street, and bitten off a portion of one of his fingers.

BROOKLYN.

JOHN KELLY, of No. 77 York-street, while under the influence of liquor, yesterday morning, inflicted a dangerous wound on the head of his son, JOHN, with a marble lamp-stand. The father was arrested and the son was taken to the hospital.

About 8 o'clock last night TIMOTHY CORNELL, of No. 211 Van Brunt-street, had a quarrel with his neighbor, DENNIS CLARK, in the course of which several blows were exchanged. Just as the latter was walking toward his home, he came up and stabbed CORNELL three times in the face with a knife, inflicting dangerous wounds. The assailant escaped, and the injured man was taken into a neighboring drug-store, where his wounds were dressed.

JOHN SLATT, aged twenty-seven years, residing with his parents at No. 12 Lawrence-street, while under the influence of liquor, shot himself through the left temple, last night, with a seven-chamber revolver, inflicting a wound from which, it is believed, he will prove fatal. He had been drinking for several days previous.

MICHAEL RILEY was caught, last night, in the act of stealing a keg of white lead, worth $50, from the premises No. 112 Portland-avenue. He is one of the best-known sneak-thieves in Brooklyn.

RICHARD VICTORY attempted to steal a horse and wagon, last night, belonging to GEO. DUNN, of No. 976 Atlantic-avenue, but before proceeding many blocks he was captured by Officer HAYNOR, of the Fifth Precinct.

ANDREW WEBINGTON, residing in Grace-court, near Henry-street, fell down the back stair of his house, on Saturday night, and broke his left arm. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital.

HERMAN SCHULTZ, aged twenty-six years, residing at No. 671 Henry-street, was found dead in a closet on Saturday morning. He is supposed to have died while in a fit.

LONG-ISLAND.

The Flushing and North-side Railroad proposes to construct at the wharf at Whitestone, to which their road will soon extend, a spacious fire-proof depot of iron and brick. The map for the extension of the railroad was filed on Friday in the County Clerk's office.

Since the wreck of the Black Warrior disappeared off Rockaway Shoals there has been no way of marking the shoal. Mr. RESVING, member of Congress from the First District, asked that a bell-buoy be located there. Commodore JENKINS, Secretary of the Light-house Board, writes, inclosing a letter from Inspector C. S. BOGGS, stating that a bell-buoy could not be maintained in "such an exposed position."

The Baptist Church Society of Rockville Centre, a new organization formed through the exertions of the Lee-avenue Baptist Church, of Greenpoint, have contracted for a new house of worship at that village, on land given them by JOHN P. RHODES, Esq. The building will be 34 by 60, with an extension 17 by 40.

Wild pigeons have been very numerous the past ten days on the island. Dr. G. A. COOPER, of Brooklyn, shot 200 in one day, last week, at Montauk.

NEW-JERSEY.

Yesterday afternoon a very neat and handsome Methodist chapel was dedicated at Bowville, West Hoboken. Bowville is a village of 1,500 inhabitants, lying between West Hoboken and Union Hill, and already contains five churches. The building has been long needed, and, by the way in which the congregation, yesterday, subscribed the amount of indebtedness, is appreciated. The dedicatory services commenced at 3 o'clock, the room being crowded to that many could not enter. The sermon of dedication was preached by Rev. G. LARRY, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Church, Jersey City.

HENRY BRIGGS, the lad who shot THOMAS DORAN, in West-side-avenue, Jersey City, was arrested, yesterday morning, in New-York, by Capt. FARRON, of the Fourth (Jersey City) Precinct. He was taken to the Fourth Precinct Station-house, where he was committed to await examination, the party of young boys who were out shooting with BRIGGS and DORAN are unanimous in the statement that the shooting was altogether accidental, BRIGGS having raised his gun to fire upward, but having let the muzzle fall slightly as he pulled the trigger. BRIGGS had borne an excellent character and the affair is much regretted by his friends. An inquest was held on Tuesday. The statement of Capt. FARRON shows that the shooting is regarded by him as having been entirely accidental. Coroner BURNS, however, tells a different story. One of the boys who witnessed the affair, reported to him that BRIGGS threatened to shoot DORAN before he fired his gun. The arrest was made in the Weehawken Lodging-house in New-York.

Some of the denizens of River-street, Newark, partook too freely of their favorite beverages yesterday, and when the ever-present war cloud was brought up they waxed warm, and a general fight was only avoided by the prompt arrest of the ringleaders. Officer RAY had occasion to arrest two of them at once, when they made a desperate attempt to escape, but the officer held them fast and succeeded in taking one to the Station-house, but the other slipped his coat, leaving it in the hands of the officer and thus effected his escape.

JOSEPH EGAN, a switchman employed by the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company, fell under the wheels of a locomotive, at Communipaw, yesterday morning, and had his right leg crushed. He was taken to Newark, where he was placed in St. Michael's Hospital. His injuries, it is feared, will prove fatal.

The Germans of Newark met at New Turn Hall, on Plane-street, last night, and accepted the address to the people of Germany, prepared by the Executive Committee of the German War Society. The meeting was a very spirited one.
